THE NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE, INC.

Organized Dec. 1, 1914.

(Co-operating with the conference committee on national preparedness.)

National Headquarters—31 Pine street, New York, N. Y.

Honorary President—Joseph H. Choate, New York.

President—Robert Bacon, New York.

Honorary Vice-President—Aiton B. Parker, New York.

Chairman Executive Committee—S. Stanwood Menken.

Chairman Finance Committee—Franklin Q. Brown.

Treasurer—Edward H. Clark.

Secretary—Herbert Barry.

Executive Secretary—Henry L. West.

Originally created for the purpose of arousing public sentiment as to the necessity of national defense and urging the enactment by congress of defense legislation, the league has developed into an organization of 100,000 members in all states of the union, with nearly 200 branches in cities and towns, and with seventy-four citizens' committees appointed by mayors and seventeen state committees appointed by governors to co-operate with the league in securing adequate preparedness.

The latest declaration of principles of the league was made by its executive committee on June 29, 1916, and is as follows:

"The National Security league holds with our military and naval specialists that our present relative military and naval weakness would render us an easy victim to the aggression of any first class power and that the cardinal requirements for such a state of preparedness as will obviate the dangers to which we are exposed are as follows: First—Compulsory military training and service, wholly under national control, for all physically fit male citizens. Second—A navy of such strength as to make the United States the second naval power in the Atlantic and concurrently the first in the Pacific. Third—That Congress should immediately make provision whereby the industrial and transportation facilities of the nation may be effectively mobilized in case of need. The league will continue to strive for these objects and for such conditions as are necessary to fully achieve them."

Under the auspices of the league the following congresses and conferences have been held: Peace and preparation conference, New York city, June 14-15, 1915; national defense conference, Chicago, Nov. 27, 1915; national security congress, Washington, D. C. Jan. 20-22, 1916; national defense conference of mayors and mayors' representatives, St. Louis, Mo., March 3-4, 1916; national defense conference, Charleston, S. C., April 28-29, 1916; national defense conference, Knoxville, Tenn., May 27, 1916.

WASHINGTON BUREAU.

Director—George Garner, Riggs building, Washington, D. C.

Purpose—The definite object of the American Defense society is to educate the voters of the country to the necessity of legislation for adequate national defense, and to the need of up-building a new spirit of Americanism.

Program—"We must have a strong navy, fully manned, of forty-eight dreadnoughts and battle cruisers in proportion. The necessary number of scout destroyers and sea-going submarines should balance the capital fleet; also auxiliaries, colliers, repair ships, tenders, etc. Ships should be laid down immediately.

"We must have a standing army of 200,000 men and 45,000 officers, backed by a national force of citizens trained in arms under a universal and obligatory system. This body should be of no less strength than 2,000,000 men, fully equipped, and with a large reserve supply of artillery and ammunition.

"This shall be America's insurance against war, against invasion, against a foreign flag over Washington—a force of defense which makes the Monroe doctrine a living fact. And this shall be the true meaning of preparedness. Half measures are useless and a waste of money."

(Resolution unanimously adopted at a joint meeting of the advisory board and the board of trustees of the American Defense society at the Hotel Biltmore, New York, on Jan. 5, 1916.)

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

American branch.

Organized June 17, 1915; incorporated Oct. 14, 1916.

President—William H. Taft, New Haven, Conn.
Vice-president—Alton B. Parker, New York, N. Y.
Treasurer—Charles C. Michener, Ogden, Utah.

The object of the league, as its name implies, is to compel nations to keep the peace without recourse to war. It proposes that the United States after the conclusion of the European war shall join an international league pledging the signatory powers jointly to use their economic and military forces against any one of their number that goes to war or commits acts of hostility against another of the signatories before any question arising shall have been submitted to a judicial tribunal for hearing and judgment or to a council of conciliation for consideration and recommendation.

BUCK STOVE COMPANY BOYCOTT CASE.

Proceedings were brought in the Supreme court of the District of Columbia in August, 1907, against the officers of the American Federation of Labor to enjoin them from conducting a boycott against the Buck's Stove and Range company of St. Louis, Mo., by advertising that the concern was "on the 'unfair' and 'we don't pettinize' lists of the federation's official organ. The injunction was issued by Judge Gould Dec. 23, 1907. On the plea that the injunction was being violated proceedings for contempt of court were brought against Samuel Gompers, president; John Mitchell, vice-president, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the federation. They were declared guilty by Justice Wright of the Supreme court of the District of Columbia Dec. 23, 1908. Mr. Gompers was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, Mr. Mitchell to nine months' and Mr. Morrison to six months' imprisonment. They were admitted to bail and the case was taken to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which tribunal decided Nov. 2, 1909, that the decree against them was valid.

An appeal was taken to the United States Supreme court, which on May 15, 1911, reversed the judgments of the lower courts and remanded the case. May 5, 1913, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia again affirmed the original findings in the contempt case, but reduced Mr. Gompers' sentence to thirty days in jail and held that Mitchell and Morrison should be exempt from prison sentences, but should each pay a fine of $500. June 19, 1913, Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme court granted an appeal by the defendants that the case be heard again by the highest tribunal.

May 11, 1914, the United States Supreme court set aside the sentences imposed upon Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison on the ground that they were barred by the statute of limitations. Justice Holmes, who read the opinion, held that the contempt proceedings should have begun within three years from the date of the offense.

BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION.

Commissioner of Mediation—William L. Chambers.

Assistant Commissioner of Mediation—G. W. W. Hanger.

Board of Mediation and Conciliation—Martin A. Knapp, chairman; William L. Chambers, G. W. W. Hanger, secretary.

Office—Southern building, Washington, D. C.

The board of mediation and conciliation, created by act of congress approved July 15, 1913, was established to settle by mediation, conciliation and arbitration controversies concerning wages, hours of labor or conditions of employment that may arise between common carriers engaged in interstate transportation and their employees engaged in train operation or train service. Whenever such a controversy arises, interrupting or threatening to interrupt the operation of trains to the serious detriment of the public interest, upon the request of either party the board of mediation is required to use its best efforts by mediation and conciliation to bring about an agreement. If such efforts are unsuccessful, the board endeavors to induce the parties to submit their controversy to arbitration and, if successful, makes the necessary arrangements for such arbitration. The board is an independent office.

General treasurer—Col. C. W. Wadsworth. Inspector-general and chief surgeon—Col. James E. Miller.

REQUIREMENTS FOR ADMISSION.

1. Honorable discharge from the United States service.

2. Disability which prevents the applicant from earning a living by labor.

3. Applicants for admission will be required to abide by all the rules and regulations made by the board of managers, perform all the duties required of them and obey all the lawful orders of the officers of the home.

4. A soldier or sailor to be admitted must forward with his application his discharge paper, his pension certificate if he is a pensioner and his discharge from a state home if he has been an inmate of such home. These papers are retained at the branch to which he is admitted to prevent their loss or fraud, but are returned to him when he is discharged. Soldiers or sailors whose pensions exceed $16 a month are not admitted to the home except for special reasons.

The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is supported by the United States government. The annual appropriation for that purpose is about $4,000,000.

STATE SOLDIERS' HOMES.

There are a number of state homes for disabled volunteer soldiers who, for various reasons, are unable to obtain admission to the national homes. The federal government contributes to

HOME FOR REGULAR ARMY SOLDIERS.

The United States maintains a home for disabled and discharged soldiers of the regular army at Washington, D. C. All soldiers who have served twenty years in the army and all soldiers who have incurred such disability, by wounds, disease or injuries in the line of duty while in the regular army as units them for further service are entitled to admission to the home. The home is in charge of a board of commissioners, consisting of the governor of the home, the adjutant-general of the army, the judge-advocate, the commissary-general, the quartermaster-general, the chief of engineers and the surgeon-general. The present governor is Lieut.-Gen. S. B. M. Young (retired).

CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Confederate veterans of the civil war have a home at Beauvoir, near Biloxi, Miss. The residence there of Jefferson Davis in his last years was secured in 1902 as a refuge for helpless old southern soldiers by the United Sons of Confederate Veterans. It is supported by that society and the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Another home for confederate veterans was opened in Washington, D. C., May 24, 1913, by the women of the Southern Relief association.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

West Point, N. Y.

The United States military academy is a school for the practical and theoretical training of cadets for the military service of the United States. When any cadet has completed the course of four years satisfactorily he is eligible for promotion and commission as a second lieutenant in any arm or corps in the army in which there may be a vacancy, the duties of which he may have been judged competent to perform.

Appointments—Each congressional district and territory, including Porto Rico, Alaska and Hawaii, is entitled to have two cadets at the academy. The District of Columbia has two. Each state is also entitled to have four cadets from the state at large and eighty are allowed from the United States at large. The president is also authorized to appoint not to exceed 180 men from the regular army and national guard who have served for one year. The appointments from a congressional district are made upon the recommendation of the representative in congress from that district and those from the state at large upon the recommendations of the senators of the state. The appointments for the United States at large are made by the president upon his own selection. The appointments from the District of Columbia are made on the recommendation of the district commissioners and that from Porto Rico on the recommendation of the resident commissioner.

Appointments are made one year in advance of admission. For each candidate appointed two alternates should be nominated. Four cadets from the Philippines are admitted.

Examinations—On the second Tuesday in January of each year the candidate selected for appointment must appear for mental and physical examination before boards of army officers at such places as the war department may designate. Candidates who pass will be admitted to the academy on March 1 following.

Mental Requirements—Each candidate must show that he is well versed in algebra, to include quadratic equations and progressions, plane geometry, English grammar, composition and literature, descriptive and physical geography and general and United States history.

Physical Requirements—No candidate will be admitted who is under 17 or over 22 years of age, or less than five feet four inches in height at the age of 17, or five feet five inches at the age of 18 and upward, or who is deformed or afflicted with any disease or infirmity which would render him unfit for military service. Candidates must be unmarried.

Pay—The pay of a cadet is $600 a year and one ration a day, or commutation therefor at 30 cents a day. The total is $709.50, to begin with his admission to the academy. No cadet is allowed to receive money or other supplies from his parents or from any other person without the sanction of the superintendent.

Enlistment—Before receiving his warrant of appointment a candidate for admission is required to sign an agreement to serve in the army of the United States eight years from the time of his admission to the academy.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

Annapolis, Md.

The United States naval academy is a school for the practical and theoretical training of young men for the naval service of the United States. The students are styled midshipmen. The course of study is six years—four years at the academy and two years at sea—at the expiration of which time the examination for final graduation takes place. Midshipmen who pass are appointed to fill vacancies in the lower grade of the line of the navy, and occasionally to fill vacancies in the marine corps and in certain of the staff corps of the navy.

Appointments—Three midshipmen are allowed for each senator, representative and delegate in congress, two for the District of Columbia, ten each year from the United States at large and fifteen from enlisted men of the navy. The appointments from the District of Columbia, ten each year at large and fifteen from enlisted men of the navy are made by the president. One midshipman is allowed from Porto Rico, who must be a native of that island. The appointment is made by the president on the recommendation of the governor of Porto Rico. Candidates must be actual residents of the districts from which they are nominated.

Examinations—Two examinations for the admission of midshipmen are held each year. The first is held on the third Tuesday in April under the supervision of the civil service commission at certain specified points in each state and territory. All those qualifying mentally, who are entitled to appointment in order of nomination, will be notified by the superintendent of the naval academy when to report at the academy for physical examination, and if physically qualified will be appointed. The second and last examination is held on the third Tuesday in June at Annapolis, Md. Alternates are given the privilege of reporting for mental examination at the same time as the principals. Examination papers are all prepared at the academy and the examinations of candidates are finally passed upon by the academic board. Certificates from colleges and high schools will not be accepted in lieu of the entrance examinations at the naval academy.

Mental Requirements—Candidates will be examined in punctuation, spelling, arithmetic, geography, English grammar, United States history, world's history, algebra through quadratic equations and plane geometry (five books of Chauvenet's geometry or an equivalent).

Physical Requirements—All candidates must, at the time of their examination for admission, be between the ages of 16 and 20 years. A candidate is eligible for appointment the day he becomes 16 and is ineligible on the day he becomes 20 years of age. Candidates are required to be of good moral character, physically sound, well formed and of robust constitution. The height of candidates for admission must not be less than five feet two inches between the ages of 16 and 18 years, and not less than five feet four inches between the ages of 18 and 20 years. The minimum weight at 16 years is 105 pounds, with an increase of five pounds for each additional year or fraction of a year over one-half. Candidates must be unmarried.

Pay—The pay of a midshipman is $600 a year, beginning at the date of his admission. Midshipmen must supply themselves with clothing, books, etc., the total expense of which amounts to $230.64. Traveling expenses to the academy are paid by the government.

Enlistment—Each midshipman on admission is required to sign articles by which he binds himself to serve in the United States navy eight years (including his time of probation at the naval academy).

WARSHIP TONNAGE OF PRINCIPAL NAVAL POWERS.

Number and displacement of warships, built and building, of 1,500 or more tons, and of torpedo craft of more than fifty tons. From table prepared by the office of naval intelligence, United States navy department, July 1, 1914. Owing to the war in Europe no later official information relating to the navies of the belligerent powers is available. It may be noted that while some of these powers have lost many ships they have continued building new ones. Information as to present status of the United States navy is given elsewhere in this volume.

The following vessels are not included in the tables: Ships over twenty years old from date of launch, unless they have been reconstructed and rearmcd within five years; torpedo craft over fifteen years old; transports, colliers, repair ships, converted merchant vessels, or any other auxiliaries; vessels of less than 1,500 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than fifty tons.

Dreadnoughts are battle ships having a main battery of all big guns (11 inches or more in caliber). Vessels called battle ships are of 10,000 tons or more displacement and having guns of more than one caliber in the main battery. Battle cruisers have guns of the heaviest caliber in the main battery. They have an increase of speed at the expense of carrying fewer guns in the main battery and a decrease of armor protection.

CENTENARIANS IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

According to the census of 1910 there were then in the United States 3,555 persons 100 years of age and over. Of these, 1,380 were men and 2,175 were women. Classified according to the color they were: White men, 326; white women, 438; total, 764; negro men, 1,004; negro women, 1,671; total, 2,675; Indian men, 50; Indian women, 66; total, 116. Classified as to place of birth, 439 were native white and 293 foreign born white. The number of centenarians reported by the census of 1900 was 3,504. "It may be noted," says a census report in commenting on these figures, "that the proportion of centenarians, according to the census returns, was less in 1910 than in 1900. In fact, the proportion has steadily decreased from census to census for over half a century. The number of centenarians reported in 1910 was equal to 4 for each 100,000 of the total population, while the corresponding ratio in 1850 was 11. It is improbable that any such decrease in longevity has actually occurred. By no means have all those who report themselves as 100 years old or more. In fact, reached that age, and the apparent reduction in the proportion of centenarians is probably due to greater accuracy in the returns."

Deaths of centenarians reported from Nov. 1, 1915, to Nov. 1, 1916:

BOSTON LIGHT ANNIVERSARY.

A small bronze tablet, bearing the inscription "Boston Light, built at this place by the province of Massachusetts, was first lighted Sept. 4, 1716, old style, destroyed 1776 and rebuilt 1783," and, in small letters beneath, "This tablet has been placed by the United States Lighthouse service, Sept. 25, 1916, in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the first lighthouse in America," was unveiled Sept. 25 with appropriate ceremonies at Boston light station, at the entrance to Boston harbor, Mass. Boston light had had a eventful and interesting history during its 200 years of existence. First built by the province of Massachusetts at a cost of £2,355, it was captured and recaptured several times in the early days of the revolution and finally demolished by the British in 1776 at the time of the evacuation of Boston. It was rebuilt on the same site in 1783 immediately after the close of the war, and with eight other colonial lights then in operation was taken over by the general government in accordance with the act of congress of Aug. 7, 1789. The height of the tower was increased in 1859, and the buildings have been renovated and the apparatus and equipment improved from time to time as needed, so that despite its age, the light station is for all practical purposes essentially modern and up to date.

WILLARD VS. MORAN.

Jess Willard of Chicago and Frank Moran of Pittsburgh boxed ten rounds for the heavyweight championship of the world in Madison Square garden, New York, N. Y., Saturday evening, March 25, 1916. Though according to the laws of New York state no formal decision was permitted the match was awarded by the sporting writers who witnessed it to Willard. The fighting was rather tame, no attempt being made by the title holder to register a knockout though he had the best of it in practically every round. The total gate receipts amounted to $151,524, of which the state of New York received $11,364.13. Willard received $55,100 and Moran $26,750. The referee was Charley White.

YACHTING.

THE AMERICA'S CUP.

RECORD OF RACES.

1851—Aug. 22. In this, the year of the great exhibition in London, the Royal Yacht Club of England offered a cup to the winner of a yacht race around the Isle of Wight. The course was 60 miles in length. The race was won by the schooner yacht America, designed by George Steers for John C. Stevens of the New York Yacht club. The America was 94 feet over all, 83 feet on the water line, 22½ feet beam and 11½ feet draft. There was no time allowance and the competing yachts ranged in size from a three-masted 292-ton schooner, the Brilliant, to the 47-ton cutter the Aurora, which came in second in the race. The time of the America was 10 hours and 34 minutes; that of the Aurora was 24 minutes slower. The cup after that became known as the America's cup and has now been successfully defended for sixty-six years.

SKAT.

Charles Reichenbach of Milwaukee, Wis., won the championship and a cash prize of $1,000 at the nineteenth annual congress of the American Skat league held in Milwaukee July 8-10, 1916. He made 1,132 points. Bennie Schmoltd, also of Milwaukee, took second place with twenty-three games won. The 1917 meet will be held in Chicago.

MOTORING.

Road racing was practically eliminated by automobile makers and drivers in 1916 in favor of speedway contests. Tracks of this kind have become numerous from the Atlantic to the Pacific and there are not many large cities now which do not boast of having a speed arena for motor drivers. The most successful of the motor speed merchants in 1916 were Dario Resta, John Aitken and Ralph de Palma, the three carrying off most of the big purses. The events won and records made by them will be found in the table "American Speedway Racing in 1916."

FATAL ACCIDENTS.

The fatal accidents, which have marred so many motor speed contests in past years, were not absent in 1916. The most prominent racing man killed was Robert ("Wild Bob") Burman. He met his death April 8 while taking part in the annual road race at Corona, Cal. His machine, owing to the blowing out of a tire, skidded on a turn, ran off the track and into a crowd of spectators before it turned completely over. In addition to Burman, his mechanic, Eric Schrader, and a policeman were killed.

On the Sheepshead Bay (N. Y.) speedway, May 13, Carl Limberg and his mechanic, R. Pallott, were killed in the Metropolitan trophy race. Limberg apparently lost control of his car while running at the rate of nearly 100 miles an hour and it dashed over the rail. At Omaha, July 15, Dan Colombo, a mechanic, was killed by the car in which he was riding leaving the track on a curve. At Kalamazoo, Mich., Aug. 27, Marion Arnold, mechanic, and Jack Peacock, driver were killed in a racetrack collision in which eleven cars were piled up.

Gil Anderson and his mechanic, Bert Shields, were seriously injured while racing in Cincinnati, O., Sept. 4. Jack Le Cain and Tom Rooney were hurt on the Indianapolis speedway May 30, and Ralph Witledge, a mechanic, was so badly burned at the Chicago speedway Aug. 14 that he died some days later.

Lewis Jackson, driver, and three spectators were killed at the Grand Prize race, Santa Monica, Cal., Nov. 18.

NOTABLE PERFORMANCES.

Here are some of the more noteworthy achievements of the motor racing champions in the year. At the Ascot speedway, Los Angeles, Cal., March 19, Barney Oldfield made a mile from a flying start in :45 flat, while Bob Burman made a mile from a standing start in :58 $\frac{1}{2}$.

On the Ocean Beach speedway at Daytona, Fla., April 10, Ralph Mulford in a Hudson drove a mile in 35.12 seconds, which was a new record for a stock chassis of the 300 cubic inch class.

Dario Resta on the Chicago speedway June 18 made ten miles in 5:51.2, or at the rate of 101 miles an hour; twenty-four miles in 13:42.6, or 105 miles an hour, and fifty miles in 13:57.4, or 94 miles an hour.

In an elimination contest at Omaha July 13 Ralph Mulford drove a Peugeot at the rate of 111.9 miles an hour.

Dario Resta in a trial run on the Chicago speedway Aug. 17 made a lap of two miles with his Peugeot in 1:03.44, an average of 112.5 miles an hour. On the same track and date Ralph de Palma in a Mercedes made fifty miles at an average speed of 105 miles an hour.

On the Sheepshead Bay speedway Sept. 30 Jack Aitken in a Peugeot won the Vincent Astor cup and purse of $10,000 by making the 250 miles in 2:23:04.02, an average rate of 104.8 miles an hour, beating the world's record for the distance.

On the same track, Oct. 28, in winning the 100 mile race for the Harkness cup he established a new American record for the distance by covering it in 56:37. Of the distance forty miles were made in 21:52, which was claimed as a world's record for any kind of car on any kind of track.

In the elimination trials for the Astor cup Joe Christiaens and Louis Chevrolet, each driving a Sunbeam car, made a world's record of 115 miles an hour on the Sheepshead Bay track Sept. 28.

TWENTY-FOUR HOUR RECORD.

Ralph Mulford in a Hudson car made a new twenty-four hour world's record by running 1,819 miles in that time on the Sheepshead Bay speedway May 1-2, 1916. The previous record was 1,581 miles 1,310 yards, made by S. F. Edge on a cement track at Weybridge, England, June 28-29, 1907.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RECORDS.

The coast to coast record was shattered several times in the course of 1916. In the order of their occurrence the performances were as follows:

Robert Hammond in an Empire car drove from San Francisco to New York, a distance by the route taken of 3,384 miles, in 6 days 10 hours 59 minutes May 16-23. This lowered the record set the previous week by a Cadillac eight cylinder car, which made the trip from Los Angeles to New York in 7 days 11 hours 52 minutes.

Forty-three Saxon sixes, racing in relays, made the run from New York to San Francisco in 6 days 18 hours 10 minutes July 15-22. The distance by the Lincoln highway, which was used most of the way, is 3,331 miles, but detours added considerably to the mileage.

Driving a Marmon 24, S. B. Stevens arrived in San Francisco at 5 p. m., July 29, just 5 days 18 hours 30 minutes out from New York city.

W. F. Sturm, driving a Hudson Super-Six, made the distance from San Francisco to New York in exactly 5 days 3 hours 31 minutes Sept. 13-18 and then made the return trip in 5 days 17 hours 32 minutes, making the time for the round trip in 10 days 21 hours 3 minutes. The distance traveled was 6,592 miles.

CHICAGO-NEW YORK RECORD.

B. F. Durham and Al Walden drove from Chicago to New York in 31 hours flat June 6-7, the total mileage by the route taken being 1,047.

PIKES PEAK CLIMB.

Rea Lentz of Seattle, driving an eight cylinder Romano special, won the race up Pikes peak Aug. 12, making the distance of 12.4 miles in 20:55, or at a rate of about thirty-six miles an hour. On the previous day Ralph Mulford in a Hudson Super-Six made the climb in the record time of 18:24, but in the race itself had to take second place, his time being 21:40.

RECORD FOR ENDURANCE.

The record for time spent in the air in non-stop aeroplane flights is held by Reinhold Boehm, a German aviator. At Johannisthal, Germany, July 11, 1914, he set the endurance record at 24 hours and 12 minutes. He used an ordinary Albatross army biplane and covered approximately 1,350 miles.

NOTABLE NEW RECORDS.

Theodore MacCauley, carrying six passengers in a hydroaeroplane, remained in the air 1 hour 10 minutes and 5% seconds, traveled eighty-eight miles and ascended 950 feet at Newport News, Va., April 30, 1916. On the same day Victor Carlstrom in an aeroplane ascended 16,500 feet carrying a passenger.

Victor Carlstrom, in a Curtiss 200 horse power military biplane, attempted to fly from Chicago to New York between sunrise and sunset Nov. 2, 1916, but owing to engine trouble failed to carry out all he had planned. However, he traveled 652 miles in 6 hours 7½ minutes' actual flying time. Of this distance he made 480 miles between Chicago and Erie, Pa., without a stop in 4 hours 1 minute, constituting a new American nonstop record. Carlstrom's average per hour for the day's flight was 107 miles, this also constituting a new speed record. He landed at Hammondsport, N. Y., at 4:24 p. m.

Miss Ruth Law of Chicago bettered Carlstrom's record Nov. 19 by flying from Chicago to Hornell, N. Y., without a stop. The distance is 590 miles. She went on to Binghamton, N. Y., making 967 miles for the day. Her actual flying time was 8 hours 26 minutes.

RECORD FOR DISTANCE.

The record for distance traveled in a balloon in continuous flight in a race is held by Maurice Belems of France, who made 1,354 miles in contesting for the James Gordon Bennett cup Oct. 27-29, 1912. In 1900 Count de la Vaux made a journey of 1,193 miles and in 1910 Alan R. Hawley and Augustus Post covered 1,171 miles.

Hans Berliner with two passengers made a balloon flight Feb. 8-16, 1914, from Bitterfeld, Germany, to Kirgischansk, in the Ural mountains, Russia. The distance is approximately 1,800 miles.

The record for distance traveled over water in a dirigible balloon is held by Walter Wellman, who on Oct. 15-18, 1910, made approximately 1,000 miles in an attempt to cross the Atlantic in the America.

RECORD FOR HEIGHT.

The record for height made in an ordinary gas balloon is 28,750 feet. It was made by Prof. Berson of Berlin, Dec. 4, 1894. A record of nearly 33,000 feet was claimed for the French balloon Icare in 1913.

The world's dirigible balloon record for altitude is 9,514 feet. It was made by the French dirigible Clement-Bayard III, May 20, 1912. The balloon carried 36 passengers.

PEDESTRIANISM.

George H. Goulding of Toronto, Canada, walked a mile in 6:28 in the 71st regiment armory in New York City Jan. 20, 1916. This equaled the world's record on a board floor track made by himself Dec. 16, 1911, in Buffalo, N. Y. In the 22d regiment armory in New York, March 18, he walked 2 miles in 13:37.

A new American record of 2:06:06½ for the 15 mile walk was made by Edward Renz of the Mohawk Athletic club at Celtic park, New York, N. Y., May 14, 1916. The former record of 2:14:45 was made by W. O'Keefe Dec. 31, 1880.

Starting from New York, N. Y., June 2, 1913, Edward Payson Weston, 75 years old, walked to Minneapolis, Minn., arriving there Aug. 2. His route took him through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. The distance covered was 1,546 miles.

Weston in 1867 walked from Portland, Me., to Chicago, Ill., in 25 days 22 hours. In 1907 he covered the same distance of 1,230 miles in 24 days 19 hours. In 1909 he walked from New York to San Francisco, starting March 15 and arriving at his destination July 14. The distance covered was 3,975 miles. His route was by way of Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Ogden and Reno. In 1910 he walked from Los Angeles, Cal., to New York, N. Y., in seventy-seven days, following the Santa Fe road to Chicago and the New York Central from here to New York. The total distance was 3,483 miles.

ROQUE.

NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

In the thirty-fifth annual tournament of the National Roque association, held in Norwalk, Conn., and ending Aug. 19, 1916, Edward Clark of Springfield, Mass., won the championship. His brother Harold Clark, champion in 1915, was second.

WESTERN CHAMPIONSHIPS.

LINCOLN PARK TOURNAMENT.

The fourth annual tournament of the Western Roque association (inc.) was held on the courts in Lincoln park, Chicago, Aug. 7-12, 1916. C. C. King of Chicago led the first division with a percentage of .883. F. E. Parmelee of Chicago was first in the second division with a percentage of .642 and M. T. Reeves of Columbus, Ind., won in the third division with a percentage of .650. Mr. King retained the Jewelers' medal by defeating J. D. Kramer of West Alexandria, O., in four straight games.

WASHINGTON PARK TOURNAMENT.

The fifth annual tournament of the Western Roque association (not inc.), affiliated with the National Roque association, took place on the courts in Washington park, Chicago, Aug. 14-19, 1916. F. C. Turner of Pasadena, Cal., led the first division with 305 points. W. A. Rounds of Cleveland, O., was first in the second division with 293 points and J. C. Jackson of Kansas City, Mo., won the gold medal in the third division with 352 points. Joseph Kennedy of Chicago won the diamond medal by defeating L. H. Plummer, also of Chicago, in three straight games.

INTERSTATE TOURNAMENT.

The championship of the Interstate Roque association was won Sept. 14, 1916, at New Paris,

O., by C. G. Reynolds of Cleveland, O., with a .900 per cent score. He also won the Anderson medal. The King medal was won by Wissler of Milton, Ind.

WRESTLING.

NATIONAL A. A. U. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The national amateur wrestling championships were decided at a tournament under the auspices of the Amateur Athletic union in Newark, N. J., May 6, 1916. The winners in the principal classes were:

108 pound class—George H. W. Taylor, Newark, N. J.

115 pound class—Kalmar Borsits, Gary, Ind.

STECHER VS. AMERICUS.

In Baltimore, Md., April 23, 1916, Joe Stecher of Nebraska defeated Americus of Baltimore in two straight falls. Stecher won his first fall in 2:15 with a bar and scissors hold and the second in 2:35 in the same way.

STECHER VS. DEMETRAL.

Joe Stecher met William Demetral in the Coliseum, Chicago, May 5, 1916, and defeated him in two straight falls with the body scissors and wristlock holds in 6:42 and 2:57.

STECHER VS. HUSSANE.

Joe Stecher defeated Yussif Hussane, the Turk, in straight falls in the Armory, Louisville, May 12, in 13:10 and 2:30.

CUTLER VS. BEELL.

Charley Cutler defeated Fred Beell in straight falls in Chicago May 30, 1916, in 16:00 and 1:30 by headlock and armlock holds.

SKI JUMPING.

NATIONAL TOURNAMENT.

Henry Hall of Ishpeming, Mich., won first place and the championship in the national ski tournament held at Glenwood, Minn., Feb. 4-5, 1916. In the professional class the leaders stood as follows:

	Points.
Henry Hall, Ishpeming, Mich.....	285
Ragnar Omtvedt, Chicago, Ill.....	261½
Carl Hall, Steamboat Springs, Col.....	275½
G. Knutson, Milwaukee, Wis.....	275
Axel Hendrickson, Duluth, Minn.....	270½
Burt Overby, Hudson, Wis.....	261½
Bert Hanson, Coleraine, Minn.....	261½
Oscar Gunderson, Chippewa Falls, Wis.....	255
Lars Haugen, Chippewa Falls, Wis.....	237
Barney Reilly, Blair, Wis.....	233

The standing distance jump was won by Lars Haugen, who made a distance of 132 feet. Winners in the amateur events finished in the following order: Andreas Olson, Iola, Wis.; Gilbert Haugen, Mount Horeb, Wis.; Gunnar Overby, Glenwood, Minn.; Earl Gunderson, Chippewa Falls, Wis.; L. A. Holby, Northfield, Minn.

Officers for 1916-1917: President, T. O. Raanen, Chicago; vice-president, G. C. Torjusen, Glenwood, Minn.; secretary, Aksel Holter, Ashland, Wis.; treasurer, Charles F. Flagstad, Superior, Wis.

LONGEST SKI JUMP.

Ragnar Omtvedt of Chicago holds the record for the longest jump on skis. At a meet held at Steamboat Springs, Col., Feb. 19, 1916, he cleared 192 feet 9 inches. The previous best record was made by Amble Oumundsen in Norway in 1915—54 meters, or 177 feet. Up to that time Omtvedt had held the world's championship with 169 feet 6 inches, which was the length of a jump made by him at Ironwood, Mich., Feb. 16, 1913.

WHIST.

AMERICAN W. L. CONGRESS.

In the twenty-sixth annual congress of the American Whist league held at Spring Lake, N. J., June 26 to July 1, 1916, the Hamilton trophy was won by the Knickerbocker Whist club team of New York city, composed of E. Elliot, Jr., W. B. Gower, S. S. Lenz and R. L. Parsons. In the contest for the Minneapolis trophy the Cleveland and New York Bridge clubs were tied on the match score with 7.3 and consequently no award was made. The trophy was given into the custody of the New York Bridge club. The associated members' trophy was won by Mrs. E. E. Davidson, the Manhattan trophies by Miss E. W. Freeman and W. H. Barney and the congress trophies by S. S. Lenz and R. L. Parsons.

Officers (1916-1917)—President, J. C. Beardslee, Cleveland, O.; vice-president, P. G. Brown, New York, N. Y.; secretary, C. P. Cadley, 516 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; treasurer, E. G. Comstock, Milwaukee, Wis.

WOMAN'S WHIST LEAGUE.

The nineteenth annual tournament of the Woman's Whist league was held in Chicago, Ill., May 9-13, 1916. Winners of the principal trophies were:

Cavendish—Clover club of Chicago (Mrs. L. M. Lloyd, Mrs. R. Fleischer, Mrs. H. L. Rockwell, Mrs. M. E. Capelle).

Howell Challenge—New Amsterdam Whist league, New York, N. Y. (Mrs. A. A. Smith and Mrs. C. S. Waterhouse).

Boston—Mrs. J. C. Bond, Mrs. J. W. Munday, Mrs. George Morton and Mrs. E. W. Noakes, all of Chicago.

Western—Clover club of Chicago (Mrs. R. Fleischer and Mrs. H. L. Rockwell).

Pittsburgh—Woman's Whist club of Baltimore (Mrs. B. Gaither and Miss H. B. Dugan).

The 1917 tournament will be held in Philadelphia, Pa.

PISTOL SHOOTING.

In connection with the National Rifle association's annual tournament at Jacksonville, Fla., in October, 1916, two pistol matches were held, one being for individuals and the other for teams. The pistol used was the .45 caliber, issued by the government. The individual match was won by Lieut. J. B. Garland, Indiana infantry, with a score of 387. The team match was won by the Mound City Rifle club of St. Louis, Mo., with an aggregate score of 1,760.

POLO.

The American senior polo championship of 1916 was won at Narragansett Pier, R. I., July 29, by the Great Neck team, which defeated Meadowbrook, the champions in 1915, by 9½ to 7½ goals.

The Westmoreland team of Pittsburgh, Pa., defeated the Chicago team at Dayton, O., June 15, 1916, by a score of 17 to 5½ and secured the four individual silver cups.

THE SAGE FOUNDATION.

March 12, 1907, Mrs. Russell Sage of New York announced that she had set aside the sum of $10,000,000 to be known as the Sage Foundation and to be devoted to the improvement of the social and living conditions in the United States.

Following is a part of the statement given out by Mrs. Sage as to the object of the gift: "I have set aside $10,000,000 for the endowment of this foundation. Its object is the improvement of social and living conditions in the United States. The means to that end will include research, publication, education, the establishment and maintenance of charitable and beneficial activities, agencies and institutions and the aid of any such activities, agencies and institutions already established."

The general director of the fund is John M. Glenn, Office, 130 East 22d street, New York, N. Y.

THE GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Organized Feb. 27, 1902.

Chairman—Frederick T. Gates.

Secretary—Wallace Buttrick.

Treasurer—L. G. Myers.

Members of Board—Frederick T. Gates, Walter H. Page, J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., Albert Shaw, Wallace Buttrick, Starr J. Murphy, Edwin A. Alderman, Hollis B. Frissell, Harry Pratt Judson, Charles W. Eliot, Andrew Carnegie, Edgar L. Marston, Willkie Rose, Jerome D. Greene, Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., Abraham Flexner, George E. Vincent.

Offices—61 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

The General Education Board was informally organized Feb. 27, 1902, at the suggestion of John D. Rockefeller's committee on benevolence and was given a charter by congress and formally organized in January, 1903. The plan was designed and adapted to assist Mr. Rockefeller in distributing his gifts to education and to afford a medium through which other men of means might contribute to the same end. The board, a few days after its initial meeting, received from Mr. Rockefeller the sum of $1,000,000, the use of which was to be confined to the study and promotion of education in the southern states.

June 30, 1905, the board was notified that Mr. Rockefeller would donate $10,000,000, the principal of which was to be laid in perpetuity as a foundation for education, the income to be used for the benefit of institutions of learning in such manner as might be deemed best adapted to promote a comprehensive system of higher education in the United States. In 1907 Mr. Rockefeller gave the board $32,000,000 and in 1909 added $10,000,000 more to the fund. The board was authorized to distribute the principal of the fund, and all other endowment funds hitherto contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, whenever in the discretion of the members or their successors it should be deemed advisable to do so.

The charter of the board provides that the object of the corporation shall be "the promotion of education within the United States of America, without distinction of race, sex or creed."

The first comprehensive report of the work of the board, covering its activities since its organization twelve years ago, was issued Jan. 18, 1915. It gave details showing that, using the board as a medium, John D. Rockefeller had up to that time provided more than $73,000,000 for the cause of education.

Including the funds given through the board, and the funds still in its hands, and as a result of the efforts of the board in inducing others to give, the total sum of $117,362,710.24 had been dedicated to the cause of education in the United States. In 1916 this sum had risen approximately to $120,000,000.

The total amounts appropriated by the board and contributed by others up to the time the last report was made were distributed as follows:

Colleges and universities.....	$50,384,323.80
Medical schools.....	4,920,874.11
Negro colleges and schools.....	1,343,928.24
Miscellaneous schools.....	407,324.02
Professors of secondary education.....	242,861.09

ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.

The Rockefeller Foundation with principal funds of approximately $100,000,000 was granted a charter by the state of New York in 1913. Officers: President, John D. Rockefeller, Jr.;

secretary, Jerome D. Greene; treasurer, L. G. Myers. Headquarters, 61 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

NONCONTIGUOUS POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Philippine islands were ceded to the United States by Spain Dec. 10, 1898. Maj.-Gen. Merritt was the first military governor. He was succeeded in August, 1899, by Maj.-Gen. E. S. Otis, who in turn was followed in May, 1900, by Maj.-Gen. Arthur MacArthur. The last named remained in office until July 4, 1901, when the military authority was transferred to Gen. A. R. Chaffee. By order of the president Gen. Chaffee was relieved of his duties as military governor July 4, 1902, and the office terminated. The Philippine commission was at the same time made the superior authority. Sept. 2 the islands were divided into three military departments, to be known as the department of Luzon, the department of Visayas and the department of Mindanao.

July 1, 1902, congress passed an act providing temporarily for the government of the Philippines, providing for the election by popular vote, two years after a census of the islands had been taken and published, of delegates to an assembly consisting of not more than 100 members nor less than fifty, apportioned among the provinces as nearly as possible according to population. The first election was held July 20, 1907, when eighty members of the legislature were chosen. The first session was formally opened Oct. 16 by William H. Taft, the first civil governor of the islands after they came into American possession.

By act of congress approved Aug. 29, 1916, the legislative authority is vested in the Philippine legislature, composed of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives. The senate consists of twenty-four senators and the house of representatives of ninety members. The legislature created under this law opened its first session on Oct. 16, 1916, and on its being organized the Philippine commission ceased to exist and the members thereof vacated their offices. Sergio Osmena was elected speaker of the house and Manuel Quezon president of the senate.

ISLAND OF PORTO RICO.

Porto Rico, according to the decision of the United States Supreme court in the insular cases May 27, 1901, is a territory appurtenant and belonging to the United States, but not a part of the United States within the revenue clause of the constitution. The island was ceded to the United States by Spain Dec. 10, 1898, and was under military rule until the Foraker law went into effect May 1, 1900. In accordance with the third section of that act, the legislative assembly of Porto Rico having put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of government, President McKinley on the 25th of July, 1901—the anniversary of the landing of American troops on the island in 1898—proclaimed free trade between the United States and Porto Rico.

Government.—Civil government, under the provisions of the Foraker act, was established May 1, 1900. The upper house consists of eleven members, six of whom are "cabinet" officers appointed by the president; the lower house is made up of thirty-five delegates elected by the people every two years. The governor, who is appointed by the president, has practically the same duties as the governor of any other territory of the United States. The present officers are: Governor, Arthur Yager; secretary, Martin Travieso; treasurer (vacancy); commissioner of education, Paul G. Miller; attorney-general, Howard L. Kern; auditor, J. W. Bonner; commissioner of interior, Manuel Domenech; director of labor, charities and correction, Manuel Cammas; United States district judge, Peter J. Hamilton; resident commissioner in the United States, Luis Munoz Rivera. Area and Population.—The area of Porto Rico is 3,435 square miles and the population in 1910 was 1,118,012, of which 65.5 per cent was white, 30 per cent mulatto and 4.5 per cent black. The cities having more than 5,000 inhabitants in 1910 were: San Juan, 48,716; Ponce, 35,065; Mayaguez, 16,568; Arecibo, 9,612; Aguadilla, 125; Yauco, 6,533; Caguas, 10,354; Guayama, 8,321. Commerce.—For the year ended June 30, 1916, the total domestic exports from Porto Rico to the United States were $60,952,758, and imports from the United States amounted to $34,927,311. The leading articles of export are coffee, oranges, brown sugar and tobacco.

Prices of nearly all kinds of commodities rose steadily in the latter half of 1916. For example, during the week ending Nov. 4 the number of alterations in the 331 quotations received by Dun's Review was 100, of which eighty-six were advances and fourteen declines. This was abnormal, but the same condition of affairs had been a feature of the reports for several of the preceding weeks. The net result of the fluctuations in the grain markets was a further enhancement in the prices of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley and flour. Cotton fabrics advanced and so did hides and leather, meats, dairy products, iron and steel. In fact, there was a downward trend in only a few and relatively unimportant articles.

WHOLESALE COMMODITY PRICES.

The New York Annalist's "Curve in the Cost of Living," or index number, which shows the fluctuations in the average wholesale price of twenty-five food commodities selected and arranged to represent a theoretical family's food budget, indicated that prices rose steadily from September and October in 1915 to the same time in 1916 except that there was a slight downward movement in June. The index number published Nov. 4, 1916, showed:

CAUSES FOR HIGHER PRICES.

In general the war in Europe and the shortage in crops were considered the main reasons for the upward trend of prices. There were other factors having a tendency in the same direction, such as higher wages, increased consumption, shortage of labor, scarcity of materials, depletion of reserve stocks and the excessive accumulation of gold. In some cases prices were doubtless increased because the sellers possessed the power to increase them through monopoly or otherwise.

EPIDEMIC OF INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

The United States was visited in 1916 by a severe epidemic of poliomyelitis or infantile paralysis. According to the government health service the disease began its ravages in the borough of Brooklyn, New York, on May 9, 1916, twenty cases appearing between that time and the end of the month. Only two of these cases were reported to the health department during the month of May, the first group of cases of sufficient size to attract attention being reported on June 8. The investigation, started as a result of these reports, disclosed the presence of a considerable number of cases in Brooklyn, and on June 17 it was recognized and announced in the public press that the disease was unduly prevalent.

What was true of Brooklyn was substantially true of the other boroughs of the city. Cases began developing in June and increased rapidly in July and August, after which time the number reported began to decrease. Up to Oct. 17 there had been in New York city a total of 9,216 cases and 2,373 deaths. The largest number of cases reported in any one week was for that ended Aug. 12, when it reached 1,151. The disease spread throughout the country, but nowhere else was it so prevalent as in New York and the cities immediately adjacent to it in New Jersey. Philadelphia had a considerable number of cases, the largest number of cases occurring in August and September. In Boston there were not many instances of poliomyelitis until September and October. In Chicago approximately 240 cases had been reported up to the middle of October. Practically no state in the union was entirely free from the disease, which, however, was more prevalent in the crowded eastern centers than in the middle and western parts of the country.

The mortality was the highest on record for a large epidemic of this disease, the case fatality rate being about 22 per cent. Of the children attacked by the disease about 10 per cent were under 1 year of age, 80 per cent between 1 and 5 years and 10 per cent over 5 years.

In an article contributed to the London Lancet Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the laboratories of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, New York, explained that poliomyelitis has been endemic in northern Europe and that five years ago it started on a movement that has carried it around the earth. In America there had been no general prevalence or epidemic of the disease until the present one, although there had been local outbreaks beginning with 1907. Following are extracts from Dr. Flexner's article:

"Epidemic poliomyelitis is pre-eminently a disease of early childhood and finds the highest percentage of its victims in the first five years of life, but does not wholly spare older children or even adults."

"The period of greatest prevalence is during the months of August, September and October in the northern hemisphere and the corresponding months in the southern hemisphere."

"The infectious agent of poliomyelitis attacks chiefly the central nervous system. Indeed, it has been detected regularly in the spinal cord and brain, and in the mesenteric lymph nodes among all the internal organs. It has also been detected in the mucous membrane of the nose and throat, and in the mucous secretions of this membrane, and in the mucous secretions of the stomach, and the small and large intestines. The virus has not been detected in such important organs as the spleen, kidneys, liver or bone marrow."

"Poliomyelitis is not a disease with a very high mortality, but its chief terror lies in its appalling power to prolong deformities. When death does occur, it is not the result, as in many infections, of a process of poisoning that robs the patient of strength and consciousness before its imminence, but is caused solely by paralysis of the respiratory function, sometimes with merciful suddenness, but more often with painful slowness, without in any degree obscuring the consciousness of the suffering victim until just before the end is reached."

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

Capital punishment prevails in all of the states of the union except Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, Washington and Wisconsin. In Michigan the only crime punishable by death is treason. The death penalty was abolished in the state of Washington in 1913.
It was abolished in Iowa in 1872 and restored in 1878. It was also abolished in Colorado in 1897, but was restored in 1901. Hanging is the ordinary mode of execution, but in Arkansas, Indiana, Massachusetts, New York, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Vermont and Virginia electrocution is the legal method. In Nevada hanging or shooting is optional with the condemned.

ANTI-CAPITAL-PUNISHMENT SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

President—Gov. George W. P. Hunt, Arizona.
Secretary—Maurice Bennett Kovnat, Chicago, Ill.
Treasurer—Fay Lewis, Chicago, Ill.
Vice-Presidents—McKenzie Cleland and Louis K.
Phillips.
Executive Board—Norman A. Sorrow, chairman;
Dr. Rudolph V. Von Liebhich, Gov. George W.
P. Hunt, Maurice B. Kovnat.

National Hdqrs—5483 Harper avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The Anti-Capital-Punishment Society of America was organized by Maurice B. Kovnat and Norman A. Sorrow for the purpose of carrying on throughout the country a systematic campaign in favor of the repeal of capital punishment laws and saving the lives wherever possible of those who are condemned by the state.

SUEZ CANAL TRAFFIC.

The total receipts of transit tonnage tolls of the Suez canal in 1913 amounted to $23,443,643, a decrease of $1,886,189 as compared with 1912. The decrease was owing to the reduction of the toll rate which went into effect Jan. 1, 1913. The total toll-paying tonnage for 1913 was 19,165,000 tons, or 456,000 tons in excess of that for 1912.

In 1913 the total number of vessels passing through the Suez canal was 5,085 as against 5,373 in 1912. The average time of vessels going through the canal in 1913 was 16 hours 19 minutes. Freight traffic in 1914, 1915 and 1916 was greatly diminished by the war in Europe, but no detailed statistics were published.

The names of members are given in the order of election. Group 1 was chosen by ballot of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Thereafter each group was chosen by the preceding members. After group 4 the selections were by the full academy of thirty, then increased to fifty, since which time the elections are individually made as vacancies occur. Membership in the academy is limited to fifty and is recruited from the National Institute of Arts and Letters. There were two vacancies when the above list was revised in October, 1916.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Women now have the right to vote in the following states:

Alaska (territory),
Arizona,
California, Colorado,
Idaho, Illinois.*

Montana, Nevada, Oregon,
Utah,
Washington.
Wyoming.

*For offices not mentioned in state constitution.

DEVELOPMENTS IN 1916.

Iowa voted against the proposed state constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage. The question was submitted to the voters at the primary held June 5 with the result, according to the official count, that the amendment was rejected by a vote of 173,024 nays to 152,683 yeas.

In Louisiana, Maryland and Oklahoma bills to submit to the voters constitutional amendments providing for woman suffrage were defeated in the legislatures.

Woman suffrage was advocated before the national party conventions, especially by the national woman's party which was organized in Chicago June 5. The formal action taken by the conventions will be found embodied in their party platforms given in full elsewhere in this volume. The woman's party and other organizations of women took a more prominent part in the presidential campaign than on any previous occasion.

Woman suffragists were divided into two camps, one led by the national woman's party, advocating suffrage by means of an amendment to the federal constitution, and the other depending upon securing suffrage through amendments to the constitutions of the states separately, as has been done heretofore. (For officers of the woman's national party see "National Political Committees" on another page.)

CITIZENSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. (Fourteenth amendment to the constitution.)

All persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are declared to be citizens of the United States. (Sec. 1992, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States, but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States. (Sec. 1993, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen. (Sec. 1995, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

Children born in the United States of alien parents are citizens of the United States.

When any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act (June 29, 1906), be naturalized without making any declaration of intention. If a widow files an application for citizenship based on her husband's declaration of intention, the children who are under the age of 21 at the time she is naturalized will be citizens through her naturalization, but if the children are past the age of 21 and were born in a foreign country, it will be necessary for them to file petitions for naturalization in their own right, using their deceased father's declaration of intention, provided they were under the age of 21 at the time of his death.

Children of Chinese parents who are themselves aliens and incapable of becoming naturalized are citizens of the United States.

Children born in the United States of persons engaged in the diplomatic service of foreign governments are not citizens of the United States.

Children born of alien parents on a vessel of a foreign country while within the waters of the United States are not citizens of the United States, but of the country to which the vessel belongs.

Children born of alien parents in the United States have the right to make an election of nationality when they reach their majority.

Minors and children are citizens within the meaning of the term as used in the constitution.

Deserters from the military or naval service of the United States are liable to loss of citizenship.

Any alien being a free white person, an alien of African nativity or of African descent may become an American citizen by complying with the naturalization laws.

"Hereafter no state court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are repealed." (Sec. 14, act of May 6, 1882.)

The courts have held that neither Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiians, Burmese nor Indians can be naturalized.

The naturalization laws apply to women as well as men. An alien woman who marries a citizen, native or naturalized, becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Aliens may become citizens of the United States by treaties with foreign powers, by conquest or by special acts of congress.

In an act approved March 2, 1907, it is provided that any American citizen shall have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign state from which he came, or five years in any other foreign state, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years provided however, that such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the department of state may prescribe; and, provided also, that no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war.

Any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein.

Any foreign woman who acquires American citizenship by marriage to an American citizen shall be assumed to retain the name after the termination of the marital relation if she continue to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or, if she resides abroad, she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year after the termination of such marital relation.

A child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship of the parent; provided that such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child; and, provided further, that the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

All children born outside the limits of the United States, who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (see above), and who continue to reside outside of the United States, shall, in order to receive the protection of the government, be required, upon reaching the age of 18 years, to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall further be required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who may, under existing law, become a citizen of the United States, who has served or may hereafter serve for one enlistment of not less than four years in the United States navy, naval auxiliary, marine corps or revenue cutter (coast guard) service and received an honorable discharge with recommendation for re-enlistment, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without previous declaration of intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore. (Act of June 30, 1914.)

NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Approved June 29, 1906.

Exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens resident in their districts is conferred upon the United States Circuit and District courts and all courts of record having a seal, a clerk and jurisdiction in actions in law or equity or both in which the amount in controversy is unlimited.

An alien may be admitted to citizenship in the following manner and not otherwise:

1. He shall declare on oath before the clerk of the proper court at least two years before his admission, and after he has reached the age of 18 years, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States and to renounce allegiance to any foreign state or sovereignty. Such declaration shall set forth the same facts as are registered at the time of his arrival.

2. Not less than two years nor more than seven after he has made such declaration he shall file a petition, signed by himself and verified, in which he shall state his name, place of residence, occupation, date and place of birth, place from which he emigrated, name of the vessel on which he arrived, the time when and the place and name of the court where he declared his intention of becoming a citizen; if he is married, he shall state the name of his wife, the country of her nativity and her place of residence at the time the petition is filed, and if he has children, the name, date and place of birth and place of residence of each child living. The petition shall also set forth that he is not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government or a member of any body of persons opposed to organized government, and that he is not a polygamist or a believer in polygamy; that he intends to become a citizen of and to live permanently in the United States, and every other fact material to his naturalization and required to be proved upon the final hearing of his application. The petition shall be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses who are citizens. At the time of the filing of the petition there shall be also filed a certificate from the department of commerce and labor stating the date, place and manner of his arrival in the United States and the declaration of intention of such petitioner, which certificate and declaration shall be attached to and be a part of his petition.

3. He shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court that he will support the constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely renounces all allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty.

4. It shall be made apparent to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States five years at least, and within the state or territory where such court is at the time held one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the constitution. In addition to the oath of the applicant, the testimony of at least two witnesses, citizens of the United States, as to the facts of residence, moral character and attachment to the principles of the constitution shall be required.

5. He must renounce any hereditary title or order of nobility which he may possess.

6. When any alien who has declared his intention dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children may, by complying with the other provisions of the act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention.

Immediately after the filing of the petition the clerk of the court shall give notice thereof by posting in a public place the name, nativity and residence of the alien, the date and place of his arrival in the United States and the date for the final hearing of his petition and the names of the witnesses whom the applicant expects to summon in his behalf. Petitions for naturalization may be filed at any time, but final action thereon shall be had only on stated days and in no case until at least ninety days have elapsed after the filing of the petition. No person shall be naturalized within thirty days preceding a general election within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

No person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers of the government of the United States, or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who is a polygamist, shall be naturalized.

POSTAL INFORMATION.

DOMESTIC RATES.

FIRST-CLASS MATTER.

Rates of postage—Letters and other first-class matter, 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof. Postcards and postal cards, 1 cent each. "Drop letters," addressed for delivery at the office where mailed, 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof when deposited at postoffices where letter carrier service is not established. Letters addressed to patrons served by rural or star route carriers or deposited in boxes along such routes are subject to postage at the rate of 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof. There is no drop rate on mail other than letters.

The limit of weight of first-class matter is four pounds.

First-class matter includes written matter, namely, letters, postal cards, postcards (private mailing cards) and all matter wholly or partly in writing, whether sealed or unsealed (except manuscript copy accompanying proof sheets or corrected proof sheets of the same and the writing authorized by law on matter of other classes). Also matter sealed or otherwise closed against inspection.

SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Rate of postage—Newspapers and periodical publications of the second class, when sent unsealed by others than the publisher or a news agent, 1 cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof on each separately addressed copy or package of unaddressed copies. To be entitled to this rate the copies must be complete. Incomplete copies are third-class matter.

Second-class matter includes newspapers and periodicals bearing notice of entry as second-class matter. No limit of weight is prescribed.

THIRD-CLASS MATTER.

Rate of postage—On unsealed third-class matter the rate is 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof on each individually addressed piece or package.

Third-class matter embraces circulars, newspapers and periodicals not admitted to the second class, nor embraced in the term "book," miscellaneous printed matter on paper not having the nature of an actual personal correspondence, proof sheets, corrected proof sheets and manuscript copy accompanying the same, and matter in point print or raised characters used by the blind. (Books are included in fourth-class or parcel post mail.)

The limit of weight of third-class matter is four pounds.

FOURTH-CLASS MATTER (DOMESTIC PARCEL POST).

Fourth-class matter embraces that known as domestic parcel post mail and includes farm and factory products (and books), not now embraced by law in either the first or second class or (with the exception of books) in the third class, not exceeding fifty pounds in weight (when mailed for delivery within the first or second zones, nor exceeding twenty pounds in weight when mailed for delivery within any of the other zones), nor greater in size than 84 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person or any postal employe or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

Rates of postage—To be fully prepaid—unsealed—as follows:

(a) Parcels weighing 4 ounces or less, except books, seeds, plants, etc., 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof, any distance.

(b) Parcels weighing 8 ounces or less containing books, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants, 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, regardless of distance.

(c) Parcels weighing more than 8 ounces, containing books, seeds, plants, etc., parcels of miscellaneous printed matter weighing more than 4 pounds, and all other parcels of fourth-class matter weighing more than 4 ounces are chargeable, according to distance or zone, at the pound rates shown in the following table, a fraction of a pound being considered a full pound:

ZONES—PARCEL POST GUIDE AND MAPS.

For parcel post purposes the United States is divided into units of area thirty minutes square. Such units form the basis of the eight postal zones. To ascertain in which zone a postoffice is located from the office of mailing, a parcel post guide, costing 55 cents, and map, costing 20 cents, are jointly used. The guide applies to all offices, but a separate map is required for each unit. A zone key is furnished with the guide for use in the units of area in which some of the largest postoffices are located, and makes the map for those units unnecessary. The guide and maps may be purchased by sending a money order to the third assistant postmaster-general, Washington, D. C. Stamps are not accepted.

INSURANCE OF FOURTH-CLASS MAIL.

Fees and conditions—Fourth-class or domestic parcel post mail (but no other) may not be registered, but may be insured against loss in an amount equivalent to its actual value, but not to exceed $5 in any one case, on payment of a fee of 3 cents; not to exceed $25 on payment of a fee of 5 cents; not to exceed $50 on payment of a fee of 10 cents, or not to exceed $100 on payment of a fee of 25 cents, in addition to the postage, both to be prepaid by stamps affixed.

COLLECT-ON-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Conditions and fee—Parcels of fourth-class or parcel post matter (but no other) may be sent C. O. D. from one domestic money order post-office to another, including those in the Canal Zone, on payment of a fee of 10 cents in addition to the postage, both to be prepaid with stamps affixed. The amount to be collected and remitted to the sender must not exceed $100. The remittance is made by postoffice money order, the fee—therefor being included in the amount collected from the addressee. A C. O. D. tag furnished by the postmaster must be filled in by the sender and attached to the parcel. The

C. O. D. fee also covers insurance against loss up to $50.

POSTAL CARDS.

Postal cards are furnished at the postage value represented by the stamp impressed thereon; single postal cards for domestic and foreign correspondence at 1 cent and 2 cents each, respectively, and reply (double) postal cards at 2 cents and 4 cents each, respectively.

SPECIAL DELIVERY SERVICE.

Special delivery service is the prompt delivery of mail by messenger during prescribed hours to persons who reside within the carrier limits of city delivery offices, to patrons of rural service who reside more than one mile from post-offices but within one-half mile of rural routes, and to residents within one mile of any post-office.

This service is obtained by placing on any letter or article of mail a special delivery stamp or 10 cents' worth of ordinary stamps in addition to the lawful postage. When ordinary stamps are used the words "Special Delivery" must be placed on the envelope or wrapper, directly under, but never on the stamps; otherwise the letter or article will not be accorded special delivery service.

REGISTRY SYSTEM.

Any matter, properly addressed and bearing the name and address of the sender, admissible to the domestic mails (except fourth-class mail, which may be insured), or to the postal union mails (except foreign "parcel post" packages for Barbados, Curacao, Dutch Guiana, France, Great Britain, Guadeloupe, Martinique, the Netherlands and Uruguay), may be registered. Foreign "parcel post" mail may be taken to the postoffice to be registered, but other mail may be registered at any postoffice or postoffice station by rural carriers, and, when sealed and not cumbersome, by city carriers in residential districts.

The registry fee for each separate article, foreign or domestic, is 10 cents in addition to the postage, both to be fully prepaid.

Indemnity for lost registered mail will be paid as follows:

Domestic mail, first class (sealed), up to $50, actual value; third class (unsealed), up to $25, actual value.

Foreign mail, amount claimed within limit of 50 francs ($9.65), for total loss (not partial loss or rifling) of a registered article exchanged between the United States and a postal union country, except foreign parcel post matter, and losses beyond control ("force majeure").

Application for a money order must be made on a form furnished for that purpose and be presented at the money order window of the postoffice or one of its stations. Money orders are issued for any desired amount from 1 cent to $100, and when a larger sum than $100 is to be sent any number of additional orders may be obtained. Applications may be made through rural carriers, who will furnish the necessary forms and give receipts for the amounts. International money orders, payable in almost any part of the world, may be obtained at all of the larger postoffices and at many of the smaller ones.

Fees for money orders payable in the United States (which includes Hawaii and Porto Rico) and its possessions, comprising the Canal Zone, Guam, the Philippines and Tutuila, Samoa; also for orders payable in Bermuda, British Guiana, British Honduras, Canada, Cuba, Mexico, Newfoundland, at the United States postal agency at Shanghai (China), in the Bahama Islands and in certain other islands in the West Indies:

For orders from $0.01 to $2.50.....	3 cents
For orders from 2.51 to 5.00.....	5 cents
For orders from 5.01 to 10.00.....	8 cents
For orders from 10.01 to 20.00.....	10 cents
For orders from 20.01 to 30.00.....	12 cents
For orders from 30.01 to 40.00.....	15 cents
For orders from 40.01 to 50.00.....	18 cents
For orders from 50.01 to 60.00.....	20 cents
For orders from 60.01 to 75.00.....	25 cents
For orders from 75.01 to 100.00.....	30 cents

The fees for foreign money orders payable in any country on which a money order may be drawn, other than those named above, may be ascertained upon inquiry at the postoffice.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

Dec. 5, 1916.

Gentlemen of the Congress: In fulfilling at this time the duty laid upon me by the constitution of communicating to you from time to time information of the state of the union and recommending to your consideration such legislative measures as may be judged necessary and expedient I shall continue the practice, which I hope has been acceptable to you, of leaving to the reports of the several heads of the executive departments the elaboration of the detailed needs of the public service and confine myself to those matters of more general public policy with which it seems necessary and feasible to deal at the present session of the congress.

I realize the limitations of time under which you will necessarily act at this session and shall make my suggestions as few as possible, but there were some things left undone at the last session which there will now be time to complete and which it seems necessary in the interest of the public to do at once.

RAILWAY ISSUE.

In the first place, it seems to me imperatively necessary that the earliest possible consideration and action should be accorded the remaining measures of the program of settlement and regulation which I had occasion to recommend to you at the close of your last session in view of the public dangers disclosed by the unaccommodated difficulties which then existed, and which still unhappily continue to exist, between the railroads of the country and their locomotive engineers, conductors and trainmen. I then recommended:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the interstate commerce commission along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the house of representatives and now awaiting action by the senate. In order that the commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are, with its present constitution and means of action, practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the president of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads.

Fourth, explicit approval by the congress of the consideration by the interstate commerce commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that, in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lock-out may lawfully be attempted.

And, sixth, the lodgment in the hands of the executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

The second and third of these recommendations the congress immediately acted on; it established the eight hour day as the legal basis of work and wages in train service and it authorized the appointment of a commission to observe and report upon the practical results, deeming these the measures most immediately needed; but it postponed action upon the other suggestions until an opportunity should be offered for a more deliberate consideration of them. The fourth recommendation I do not deem it necessary to renew. The power of the interstate commerce commission to grant an increase of rates on the ground referred to is indisputably clear and a recommendation by the congress with regard to such a matter might seem to draw in question the scope of the commission's authority or its inclination to do justice when there is no reason to doubt either.

The other suggestions, the increase in the interstate commerce commission's membership and in its facilities for performing its manifold duties, the provision for full public investigation and assessment of industrial disputes, and the grant to the executive of the power to control and operate the railways when necessary in time of war or other like public necessity, I now very earnestly renew.

The necessity for such legislation is manifest and pressing. Those who have intrusted us with the responsibility and duty of serving and safeguarding them in such matters would find it hard, I believe, to excuse a failure to act upon these grave matters or any unnecessary postponement of action upon them.

Not only does the interstate commerce commission now find it practically impossible, with its present membership and organization, to perform its great functions promptly and thoroughly, but it is not unlikely that it may presently be found advisable to add to its duties still others equally heavy and exacting. It must first be perfected as an administrative instrument.

The country cannot and should not consent to remain any longer exposed to profound industrial disturbances for lack of additional means of arbitration and conciliation which the congress can easily and promptly supply. And all will agree that there must be no doubt as to the power of the executive to make immediate and uninterrupted use of the railroads for the concentration of the military forces of the nation wherever they are needed and whenever they are needed.

This is a program of regulation, prevention and administrative efficiency which argues its own case in the mere statement of it. With regard to one of its items, the increase in the efficiency of the interstate commerce commission, the house of representatives has already acted; its action needs only the concurrence of the senate.

I would hesitate to recommend, and I dare say the congress would hesitate to act upon the suggestion should I make it, that any man in any occupation should be obliged by law to continue in an employment which he desired to leave. To pass a law which forbade or prevented the individual workman to leave his work before receiving the approval of society in doing so would be to adopt a new principle into our jurisprudence which I take it for granted we are not prepared to introduce.

But the proposal that the operation of the railways of the country shall not be stopped or interrupted by the concerted action of organized bodies of men until a public investigation shall have been instituted which shall make the whole question at issue plain for the judgment of the opinion of the nation is not to propose any such principle. It is based upon the very different principle that the concerted action of powerful bodies of men shall not be permitted to stop the industrial processes of the nation, at any rate before the nation shall have had an opportunity to acquaint itself with the merits of the case as between employe and employer, time to form its opinion upon an impartial statement of the merits, and opportunity to consider all practicable means of conciliation or arbitration. I can see nothing in that proposition but the justifiable safeguarding by society of the necessary processes of its very life. There is nothing arbitrary or unjust in it unless it be arbitrarily and unjustly done. It can and should be done with a full and scrupulous regard for the interests and liberties of all concerned, as well as for the permanent interests of society itself.

THREE OTHER ISSUES.

Three matters of capital importance await the action of the senate which have already been acted upon by the house of representatives: The bill which seeks to extend greater freedom of combination to those engaged in promoting the foreign commerce of the country than is now thought by some to be legal under the terms of the laws against monopoly; the bill amending the present organic law of Porto Rico; and the bill proposing a more thorough and systematic regulation of the expenditure of money in elections, commonly called the corrupt practices act. I need not renew my advice that these measures be enacted into law. Their urgency lies in the manifest circumstances which render their adoption at this time not only opportune but necessary. Even delay would seriously jeopard the interests of the country and of the government.

Immediate passage of the bill to regulate the expenditure of money in elections may seem to be less necessary than the immediate enactment of the other measures to which I refer, because at least two years will elapse before another election in which federal offices are to be filled; but it would greatly relieve the public mind if this important matter were dealt with while the circumstances and the dangers to the public morals of the present method of obtaining and spending campaign funds stand clear under recent observation and the methods of expenditure can be frankly studied in the light of present experience; and a delay would have the further very serious disadvantage of postponing action until another election was at hand and some special object connected with it might be thought to be in the mind of those who urged it. Action can be taken now with facts for guidance and without suspicion of partisan purpose.

I shall not argue at length the desirability of giving a freer hand in the matter of combined and concerted effort to those who shall undertake the essential enterprise of building up our export trade. That enterprise will presently, will immediately, assume—has, indeed, already assumed—a magnitude unprecedented in our experience. We have not the necessary instrumentalities for its prosecution; it is deemed to be doubtful whether they could be created upon an adequate scale under our present laws. We should clear away all legal obstacles and create a basis of undoubted law for it which will give freedom without permitting unregulated license. The thing must be done now because the opportunity is here and may escape us if we hesitate or delay.

The argument for the proposed amendments of the organic law of Porto Rico is brief and conclusive. The present laws governing the island and regulating the rights and privileges of its people are not just. We have created expectations of extended privilege which we have not satisfied. There is uneasiness among the people of the island and even a suspicious doubt with regard to our intentions concerning them which the adoption of the pending measure would happily remove. We do not doubt what we wish to do in any essential particular. We ought to do it at once.

There are other matters already advanced to the stage of conference between the two houses of which it is not necessary that I should speak. Some practicable basis of agreement concerning them will no doubt be found and action taken upon them.

Inasmuch as this is, gentlemen, probably the last occasion I shall have to address the 64th congress, I hope that you will permit me to say with what genuine pleasure and satisfaction I have co-operated with you in the many measures of constructive policy with which you have enriched the legislative annals of the country. It has been a privilege to labor in such company. I take the liberty of congratulating you upon the completion of a record of rare serviceableness and distinction.

WOODROW WILSON.

PROHIBITION SITUATION UP TO JAN. 1, 1917.

Prohibition states prior to Sept. 1, 1914: Maine, Kansas, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, West Virginia.

Prohibition advance since Sept. 1, 1914:

Virginia—Sept. 22, 1914, Virginia voted for constitutional statewide prohibition, effective Nov. 1, 1916.

Colorado—Nov. 3, 1914, Colorado voters adopted statewide constitutional prohibition, effective Jan. 1, 1916. On Nov. 7, 1916, voted down amendment to permit sale of beer.

Arizona—Nov. 3, 1914, Arizona voters adopted statewide constitutional prohibition, effective Jan. 1, 1915. On Nov. 7, 1916, passed "bone dry" amendment, entirely prohibiting importation of liquors.

Washington—Nov. 3, 1914, Washington voters adopted statewide constitutional prohibition, effective Jan. 1, 1916. On Nov. 7, 1916, two liquor amendments were defeated by 80,000 and 150,000 respectively, all big cities favoring retention of prohibition.

Oregon—Nov. 3, 1914, Oregon voted for prohibition, the law to become effective Jan. 1, 1916. On Nov. 7, 1916, beer amendment defeated and "bone dry" amendment, prohibiting importation of liquors, adopted.

Alabama—Jan. 21, 1915, the legislature of Alabama enacted a statewide prohibition measure, effective July 1, 1915.

Arkansas—Feb. 5, 1915, the Arkansas legislature enacted a statewide prohibition law, effective July 1, 1915, but the law was later amended to become effective Jan. 1, 1916. On Nov. 7, 1916, attempt to repeal prohibition defeated two to one.

Iowa—In February, 1915, the Iowa legislature voted to submit to the people a constitutional statewide prohibition amendment to be voted on at the general election in 1917, provided the legislature of 1917 ratifies; prohibition to become effective Jan. 1, 1918. Then the legislature repealed the mulct law, effective Jan. 1, 1916, thereby making Iowa dry under statute after that date.

Idaho—In February, 1915, the Idaho legislature passed a statutory prohibition law, making the state dry Jan. 1, 1916. On Nov. 7, 1916, prohibition put in constitution by about three to one.

Montana—On Nov. 7, 1916, state voted for prohibition effective Dec. 31, 1918. Majority about 20,000.

South Carolina—On Sept. 14, 1915, South Carolina voted for statewide prohibition by 41,735 votes to 16,809. The law became effective Dec. 31, 1915.

New Jersey—On March 2, 1915, the senate of New Jersey passed a bill granting to municipalities the right to vote on the liquor question.

Utah—In March, 1915, the legislature of Utah passed the Wootton bill providing statutory prohibition for Utah after June 1, 1916. The bill was vetoed by the governor after holding for many days. Dry governor and legislature elected Nov. 7, 1916, insuring statutory prohibition in 1917.

Minnesota.—On Feb. 25, 1915, the legislature of Minnesota passed a county option law, effective immediately. Under this law fifty-six county elections were held in eight months. Forty-five were dry victories.

South Dakota.—On Nov. 7, 1916, state voted for prohibition effective July 1, 1917. Majority about 25,000.

Florida.—In the spring of 1915 the legislature passed the Davis package law, abolishing the treating system and free lunch, closing saloons at 6 p. m. until 7 a. m., and imposing other restrictions so drastic that the character of the saloon in Florida is totally altered. The act closed more than 200 saloons, leaving only about seventy-five wholesale, mail order and retail liquor houses. On Nov. 7, 1916, a dry governor and legislature were elected.

Georgia.—In the fall of 1915 a special session of the legislature passed new laws for rigid prohibition and strict law enforcement. Before the passage of these laws, which went into effect May 1, 1916, prohibition in Georgia was very lax, but it is now as strict as that in any other state in the union.

Nebraska.—This state voted on Nov. 7, 1916, in favor of prohibition effective May 1, 1917, by majority of about 35,000.

Michigan.—On Nov. 7, 1916, state voted for prohibition effective April 30, 1918. Majority about 75,000.

In various states laws prohibiting liquor advertising and otherwise increasing the strictness of liquor regulation have been numerous.

DANISH WEST INDIES SALE TREATY.

Negotiations for the sale of the Danish West Indian islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix (Santa Cruz) to the United States were concluded by the government authorities in Copenhagen and Washington in the summer of 1916. A treaty providing for the transfer was drawn up and was signed in New York, N. Y., Aug. 4, by Secretary Robert Lansing and Constantin Brun, the Danish minister. The purchase price agreed upon was $25,000,000, the United States agreeing in addition to surrender certain rights obtained by discovery in Greenland. The treaty was ratified by the senate in Washington Sept. 7, less than half a dozen senators voting against it. In Denmark, however, unexpected opposition developed. The folkething, or lower house of the rigsdag (parliament), voted in favor of the sale provided a plebiscite were held, but the landsting, or upper house, adopted an order of the day declaring that if sale could not be postponed until after the war it should be settled by a general election. Members of the left and conservative parties for political reasons opposed Premier Zahle and the cabinet. After a long discussion it was decided to submit the whole question to a vote of the people to be taken Dec. 14. The people then voted in favor of ratifying the sale.

NEW CARDINALS CREATED.

Ten new cardinals were created at a secret consistory held in Rome Dec. 4, 1916. They were: Mgr. La Fontaine, patriarch of Venice. Mgr. Donato Sbarretti, former apostolic delegate in Canada, later bishop of Havana and recently assessor of the holy see. Mgr. Debourg, archbishop of Rennes. Mgr. Dubois, archbishop of Rouen.

Mgr. Vittorio Amedeo Panuzzi di Bianchi, major domo of the vatican. Mgr. Moggianni, secretary of the holy office and former apostolic delegate to Mexico. Mgr. Ascalosi, archbishop of Benevento. Mgr. Maurin, bishop of Grenoble. Mgr. Marini, secretary of the holy signature. Mgr. Glergi, secretary of the council.

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION IN WASHINGTON.

The Smithsonian institution was established by statute in 1846, under the terms of the will of James Smithson, who bequeathed his fortune in 1826 to the United States for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." From the income of the fund a building, known as the Smithsonian building, was erected in Washington, D. C., on land given by the United States. The institution is legally an establishment having as its members the president and vice-president of the United States, the chief justice and the president's cabinet. It is governed by a board of regents consisting of the vice-president, the chief justice, three members of the United States senate, three members of the house of representatives and six citizens appointed by joint resolution of congress. It is under the immediate direction of the secretary of the Smithsonian institution, who is the executive officer of the board and the director of the institution's activities. The institution aids investigators by making grants for research and exploration, providing for lectures, initiating scientific projects and publishing scientific papers. It has administrative charge of the national museum, the national gallery of art, the international exchange service, the national zoological park, the astrophysical observatory and the regional bureau for the international catalogue of scientific literature. The institution's original endowment of $541,000 has been increased by gifts and accumulated interest. The secretary of the institution is Charles D. Walcott.

HUNTING ACCIDENTS IN 1916.

In the big game hunting season ended Nov. 29, 1916, eighty-six men were killed in the United States, as compared with fifty-nine in 1915 and 111 in 1914. Michigan led with twenty-two killed, while Illinois had thirteen, Minnesota twelve and Wisconsin six. The other fatalities were divided among twelve states.

THE CARNEGIE FOUNDATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF TEACHING.

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching was founded by Andrew Carnegie in 1905 and incorporated by the congress of the United States in 1906 for the purpose of providing retiring allowances for teachers and officers of universities, colleges and technical schools in the United States, Canada and Newfoundland, and, in general, of advancing the profession of the teacher and the cause of higher education. In the administration of its endowment, which now amounts to $15,000,000, the foundation has restricted its allowances to professors and officers in a list of seventy-three institutions, selected for their educational standing, and has published a series of widely influential reports and bulletins concerning educational conditions. The president of the foundation is Henry S. Pritchett; its trustees are presidents of universities and colleges and financiers. Further information may be had by addressing the secretary, Clyde Furst, 576 5th avenue, New York.

ADAMSON LAW DECLARED INVALID.

In the United States District court in Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 23, 1916, Judge William C. Hook held the Adamson railroad eight hour law to be unconstitutional, but made it clear that his decision was not made on mature consideration of the merits of the case, but to facilitate taking the matter before the United States Supreme court for final decision before Jan. 1, 1917, when the law was to go into effect. The case came before Judge Hook on a petition from the receivers of the Missouri, Oklahoma & Gulf Railroad company that an injunction be granted and the Adamson law be declared null and void. In announcing his decision the judge said:

"The assistance of this court has been invoked to facilitate a final and authoritative determination of the constitutional question. The case was presented but yesterday and a decision is expected to-day. It is far from being agreeable duty for a judge to record a judicial conclusion without the care and deliberation essential to a conviction that he would stand to in every circumstance. Upon the merits of a case the government neither asks nor receives from a court greater consideration than is required by the settled rules and presumptions of law, but a request by the department of justice to aid the progress of a case consistently with the rights of every one cannot be declined, certainly not for personal consideration.

"Upon a consideration of the Adamson law and of what is said of its practical effect and what was intended to be accomplished by it, the judgment is that as the court construes the terms of the law it cannot be sustained." (For a full history of the railroad eight hour controversy and the text of the Adamson law see page 235.)

STRENGTH OF BELLIGERENTS IN MEN.

In a lecture at the University of Chicago delivered Jan. 20, 1916, Prof. J. Laurence Laughlin, the noted political economist, presented figures showing the strength in men of the belligerent nations at the end of the first and second years of the war. The number of men raised and lost in the first year of the war and the number available Aug. 1, 1915, were:

Country.	Raised.	Lost.	Available.
Britain.....	3,400,000	400,000	3,000,000
France.....	4,000,000	1,400,000	2,600,000
Russia.....	5,000,000	3,500,000	1,500,000
Italy.....	1,000,000	200,000	800,000
Total.....	13,400,000	5,500,000	7,900,000
Germany.....	6,700,000	2,400,000	4,300,000
Austria-Hungary.....	5,000,000	2,400,000	2,600,000
Total.....	11,700,000	4,800,000	6,900,000

Increases of men in second year of war, losses and total available Aug. 1, 1916:

Country.	Increases.	Lost.	Available.
Britain.....	2,500,000	1,000,000	4,500,000
France.....	250,000	1,400,000	1,450,000
Russia.....	6,000,000	3,000,000	4,500,000
Italy.....	400,000	200,000	1,000,000
Total.....	9,150,000	5,600,000	11,450,000
Germany.....	1,000,000	2,400,000	2,900,000
Austria-Hungary.....	200,000	1,800,000	1,000,000
Total.....	1,200,000	4,200,000	3,900,000

While these figures were compiled long before the great battles of the Somme and Verdun were fought and before the great Russian offensive in Galicia and Bukovina and while they do not take into account the forces and losses of Roumania and the other minor powers, they give a good idea of the relative strength in men of the principal belligerents. It will be noted that his estimate of the losses in two years of war are somewhat in excess of other estimates, but the difference is not large.

NAVAL STRENGTH OF BELLIGERENTS.

Since the first year of the war no reliable statistics as to the strength of the belligerent nations in ships and men have been published in any responsible quarter. The British and French have sustained heavy losses both in vessels and seamen, but both countries claim to have more than made them good by new construction and enlistment. It is certain that Germany largely increased its fleet of submarines and it is to be presumed that Britain has done likewise. The losses sustained by the French, Italian, Russian and Austro-Hungarian navies have been relatively small and it is not known that they have made any important additions to their fleets. The latest available figures as to the fleets of the belligerent powers will be found on pages 346 and 347 of this volume.

CASUALTIES IN THE WAR.

Competent observers estimated toward the close of 1916 that from the beginning of the war, Aug. 1, 1914, to Dec. 1, 1916, the total casualties were between 18,000,000 and 20,000,000. Of these between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 represented the dead. Official figures were not published except by Britain and Germany, but there is no reason for thinking that the estimates are very far out of the way. Frank H. Simonds, who has earned the reputation of being one of the ablest writers on the war, estimated that up to the middle of October the casualties had reached a total of 18,500,000, divided as follows:

ENTENTE POWERS.	CENTRAL POWERS.
France.....	2,500,000
Russia.....	5,750,000
Great Britain.....	1,400,000
Italy.....	850,000
Total.....	10,000,000
Germany.....	4,000,000
Austria-Hungary.....	4,000,000
Total.....	8,000,000

Separate figures for Roumania, Belgium and Serbia on the allied side and for Turkey and Bulgaria on the Teutonic side were not available, but the losses of these countries were estimated to exceed 500,000. The permanent losses, including killed or made incapable of further military service, were placed at 5,000,000 for the allies and 4,000,000 for the central powers.

The preceding figures may be compared with the following estimates of the losses in the first two years of the war made by the War Study Society of Copenhagen, Denmark:

Country.	Dead.	Wounded.	Invalids.
Austria	718,000	1,177,000	533,000
Belgium	50,000	110,000	33,000
Bulgaria	25,000	60,000	18,000
England	205,000	512,000	154,000
France	885,000	2,115,000	634,000
Germany	885,000	2,116,300	634,000
Italy	105,000	245,000	73,500
Russia	1,493,000	3,820,000	1,146,000
Serbia	110,000	140,000	42,000
Turkey	150,000	350,000	105,000
Total	4,631,000	9,645,300	3,372,500

If to these figures are added the losses incurred by the belligerents, including Roumania, since Aug. 1, 1916, it will be seen that the total casualties for twenty-eight months, or up to Dec. 1, 1916, must, on this basis, have been in the vicinity of 20,500,000. It must always be borne in mind, however, that these figures are in no sense official but are merely intelligent estimates.

Great Britain gave out certain official casualty statistics from which it appeared that in September, 1916, the British losses on all fronts were: Officers, 5,439; privates, 114,110; average per day, 3,856. In October the losses were: Officers, 4,331; privates, 102,702; average per day, 3,452. According to the official German casualty lists the empire's losses in October amounted to 199,675 officers and men, or at the rate of 6,441 per day. No official figures were given out by any of the other belligerent nations, but it is safe to assume that in proportion to the number of men they had in the field their rate of loss was about the same. It certainly would be true of Austria-Hungary, Russia, France and Italy.

Canada's casualties in the war up to Oct. 11 were 52,026, divided as follows: Killed in action, 8,134; died of wounds, 3,120; died of illness, 452; presumed dead, 1,069; missing, 1,372; wounded, 37,939.

PRISONERS.

John R. Mott, general secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, who visited most of the prison camps in Europe in the summer of 1916, estimated that more than 5,000,000 men were held prisoners by the belligerent nations. According to his figures Germany had 1,750,000; Russia, 1,500,000; Austria-Hungary, 1,000,000, the remainder being distributed among France, Italy, Great Britain and Turkey in order.

MONEY COST OF THE WAR.

Precise figures as to the cost of the war in money are almost as difficult to obtain as the cost of the conflict in men. However, the various governments have, when asking for loans, been obliged to present certain statements as to the expenditures which make it possible to arrive at the approximate total for all the belligerents. According to the calculations of an economic society in Copenhagen the total expenses for the first two years of the war were $51,825,000,000, divided as follows:

Germany	$11,650,000,000	Italy	$2,250,000,000
Aus.-Hung. ..	5,625,000,000	Russia	10,400,000,000
Belgium ..	400,000,000	Serbia	280,000,000
Bulgaria ..	125,000,000	Turkey	420,000,000
France ...	8,000,000,000
Britain ...	12,675,000,000	Total ...	51,825,000,000

Assuming that Dr. Karl Helfferich's estimate of $80,000,000 as the daily cost of the war to the leading belligerents is correct, the total outlay, not including the expenses of Roumania or Greece, was $9,760,000,000 from Aug. 1 to Dec. 1, 1916. Adding this to the above table gives $61,585,000,000 as the total money cost of the war from Aug. 1, 1914, to Dec. 1, 1916. Probably the true sum is in excess of this, as the daily cost of the war has risen since the Helfferich estimate was made in December, 1915. For example, Premier Asquith announced in the British house of commons Oct. 11, 1916, that the average daily rate of Britain's war expenditure was $25,000,000. Nov. 9, 1916, Alexandre Ribot, French minister of finance, told the chamber of deputies that the daily expenditures of France exceeded $21,000,000. In a speech before the German reichstag Oct. 27 Count von Roedern, the imperial treasurer, declared that the monthly German expenditures had reached $546,500,000, or about $18,216,000 a day. This would make $64,216,000 a day for these three powers alone, exclusive of Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, Turkey and the minor states. Some of these, like Serbia and Belgium, are supported financially by the allies, while the burdens of Turkey and Bulgaria are carried by Germany. In the speech referred to Count von Roedern estimated that the total expenditures of all the belligerents up to Oct. 27 had been $62,500,000,000. This, of course, was exclusive of property destroyed. As to the magnitude of this some idea may be gained from the fact that the war damage in Galicia alone was estimated at $400,000,000 by the Society of Austrian Architects in March, 1916. No reliable figures as to the destruction in Belgium, France, Poland, Serbia, East Prussia, Roumania and other countries and districts have been published.

DEATH OF EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH.

EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH.

Vienna at 9 o'clock on the evening of Nov. 21, 1916, at the age of 86 years. His reign, one of the longest in history, would have lasted exactly sixty-eight years had he lived until Dec. 2. Though active mentally to the last and taking a real part in the government of the dual empire, he suffered toward the end from throat and lung affections and ailments due to old age. His actual condition was not made public, but when it was announced a few days before his death that the heir to the throne, the Archduke Charles Francis Joseph, would be made coregent Dec. 2, the fact that the old ruler's days were numbered was surmised. The body of Francis Joseph was taken to the Hofburg palace and after lying in state for several days was conveyed to the Capuchin church and placed in the imperial vault.

The new emperor Charles Francis Joseph, who assumed the title of Charles I., was born Aug. 17, 1837. He was the son of Archduke Otto, who was the younger brother of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, whose assassination by Gavrilo Princip in Sarajevo, Bosnia, June 28, 1914, led to the European war. He was married in 1911 to Princess Zita of the Bourbon house of Parma. He has two sons, met his death at sea June 5, 1916, while on his way to Russia at the invitation of the government in Petrograd. He and his staff were passengers on the cruiser Hampshire. When the vessel was passing the west coast of the Orkney islands in a heavy sea between 7:30 and 7:45 p. m., it struck a mine and began to settle by the bows, going down fifteen minutes later. When Lord Kitchener was last seen he was on the quarterdeck with other officers. The captain called to him to enter a boat, but apparently he did not hear what was said, owing to the noise made by the wind and sea and he probably went down with the ship as did nearly all on board. A warrant officer and eleven seamen who took refuge on a raft were washed ashore the next day. No trace was found of the others. Among those who perished with Lord Kitchener were Hugh James O'Beirne, former counselor of the British embassy in Petrograd; O. A. Fitzgerald, his military secretary; Brig.-Gen. Ellershaw and Sir Frederick Donaldson.

BATTLE OF JUTLAND OR SKAGER-RAK.

Date—May 31, 1916.

Place—North sea, fifty miles west of Jutland. Vessels engaged—Eighty-one heavy and many lighter craft.

Vessels sunk—Twenty-five.

Casualties—9,480.

What is generally recognized as the greatest naval battle in history, though not the most decisive, was fought on the North sea May 31, 1916, between the main fleets of the British and German navies. The British call it the battle of Jutland because the main area of the conflict was some fifty miles west of Jutland, Denmark. The Germans call it the battle of the Skager-Rak because it was fought near the southern entrance to the arm of the North sea lying between Norway and Denmark. Both sides claimed the victory, but whichever side won it was a costly triumph in ships and men. Most commentators are agreed in calling it an indecisive fight, for both fleets were ready in a few weeks to renew the struggle.

Precise figures as to the number of vessels engaged in the battle and ships and men lost are not yet available. Even the so called official reports are incomplete and inconclusive, some facts being withheld for "military reasons." Both the British and German estimates of enemy strength and losses are evidently too high. This is natural, as the conditions under which the battle was fought were not conducive to accurate observation.

So far as known the British fleet consisted of thirty-seven dreadnoughts and eight pre-dreadnought cruisers, the whole or part of four light cruiser squadrons and a number of destroyer flotillas. The German fleet was reported to consist of sixteen dreadnoughts, five battle cruisers and six predreadnoughts. As was the case with the British, the German numerical strength in light cruisers and torpedo craft was not divulged. The main divisions of the British battle fleet were led by the commander in chief, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, Vice-Admiral Sir Cecil Burney, Vice-Admiral Sir Cecil Jerram, Vice-Admiral Sir Doveton Sturdee, Rear-Admiral Alexander L. Duff, Rear-Admiral Arthur C. Leveson and Rear-Admiral Ernest F. A. Gaunt. The battle cruiser fleet, which bore the brunt of the fight, was led by Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty. It was supported by the fifth battle squadron under Rear-Admiral Hugh Evan Thomas and later by the third battle cruiser squadron commanded by Rear-Admiral Horace L. A. Hood. The first cruiser squadron of the battle fleet was commanded by Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Arbuthnot and the second by Rear-Admiral Herbert L. Heath.

The German high sea fleet was commanded by Vice-Admiral Reinhardt Scheer and the battle cruiser squadron by Rear-Admiral Hipper. The names of the other German division commanders were not reported.

When the battle began the German fleet was to the eastward and nearer the Danish coast than was the British fleet. The German battle cruiser squadron was in advance of the main fleet and was the first to come in contact with the British battle squadron, which was some fifty miles south of the British grand fleet. The firing began at 3:43 p. m., at a range of 18,500 yards. At the head of the British line was Admiral Beatty in the Lion. Following him came the Tiger, Princess Royal, Queen Mary, New Zealand and Indefatigable. The Queen Mary was badly hit almost at the start and went down. At about 4:13 p. m. the Indefatigable was sunk. At 4:42 the German high seas fleet came up and Admiral Beatty, who had been steering south, turned north in the direction of the main British fleet. Admiral Hipper did the same and both the fighting lines continued in that direction until the British main fleet was seen coming down from the north. Then Beatty changed his direction to northeast with the enemy 14,000 yards away. He put on full speed to give room for Admiral Jellicoe to deploy his ships, but in doing so left an open space toward which the German light cruisers and destroyers dashed. They were met by Rear-Admiral Arbuthnot with his armored cruisers, but these in turn were attacked by the heaviest vessels of the German battle fleet. The Defense, the flagship, was sunk, the Warrior was disabled and had to leave the line, and later the Black Prince was lost. The third battle cruiser squadron under Rear-Admiral Hood swung into line in advance of the first battle cruiser squadron, but a few minutes later the Invincible went down and the Admiral was killed. The other British battle squadrons then came up and continued the battle until darkness put an end to the contest. The course of the battle in the later hours was toward the south and the German fleet continued in that direction, returning to its home port the following afternoon.

While the British were suffering the loss of ships, large and small, the Germans did not escape unharmed, but details of just how and when most of their losses occurred are not available. The Lutzow, which was Admiral Hipper's flagship, was sunk by gunfire and the Pommern was torpedoed late in the evening. The Frauenlob was badly damaged, "lost to sight and seen no more." The Elbing was sunk after a collision with another German ship.

Following is a list of the ships admittedly lost on each side:

These figures on the loss of life in the battle of Jutland are from German official sources, but their accuracy is disputed by the British, who say that the German losses were larger than indicated.

The British losses in officers of high rank were heavy. Among those who perished were: Rear-Admiral Horace L. A. Hood, Rear-Admiral Sir Robert K. Arbuthnot, Capt. Cecil L. Frowse, Capt. Arthur L. Clay, Capt. Charles F. Sowerby, Capt. Stanley V. Ellis, Capt. Thomas P. Bonham and Capt. Charles J. Wintour.

LOSS OF THE PROVENCE.

The French auxiliary cruiser Provence II—so designated to distinguish it from the French battle ship Provence—while engaged in transporting troops to Saloniki, was sunk in the Mediterranean sea Feb. 26, 1916, probably by a submarine. The ship had on board 4,000 soldiers belonging to the French army and of these more than 3,000 lost their lives, making it the greatest sea disaster in history.

VOYAGES OF THE SUBMARINE DEUTSCHLAND.

Germany, cut off from its maritime commerce with other nations by the British control of the seas, fitted out one of its submarines as a merchantman and sent it to the United States with a valuable cargo of dyes and other articles. The craft, under the command of Capt. Paul Koenig, sailed from Kiel, Germany, June 20, 1916, and arrived at Baltimore July 10, traveling 4,180 miles, of which less than 100 were under water. With a cargo of rubber and other merchandise it left Baltimore Aug. 1 and arrived at the mouth of the Weser Aug. 23. The Deutschland returned to the United States Nov. 1, making New London, Conn., its port of call. It set out on its return to Germany early on the morning of Nov. 17, conveyed by two tugs which were to see it safely out at sea. In the darkness one of the tugs, the T. A. Scott, Jr., was run down and sunk by the submarine. Five of the men on the tug were drowned. The Deutschland was damaged and had to return to New London for repairs. Nov. 21 the submarine made a new start for home, leaving in the afternoon by daylight.

Another submarine merchantman named the Bremen left Germany some time between the first and second voyages of the Deutschland, but did not reach America. It was supposed either to have been wrecked or captured by the British.

GERMAN SUBMARINE WARFARE.

Germany continued its submarine warfare against not only the naval vessels of the entente powers, but against their merchant ships of all kinds. This war was extended to the ships of the neutral nations as well, where the cargoes contained contraband of war. As most articles had been placed in that category few vessels were permitted to escape destruction once they were stopped by a submarine. Norway suffered heavily because of its large merchant fleet. Holland, Sweden, Spain, Greece and other neutral countries also lost many ships. Complaint was made that in many cases the crews were disembarked far out at sea in stormy weather, leading to much suffering and in some instances to loss of life. Cases where no warning was given were numerous.

In the diplomatic correspondence given on another page the details of some of the many cases in which American lives were either imperiled or lost through the ruthless methods of the submarine commanders are set forth. Following is a list of vessels sunk in December, 1915, or in the year 1916 where there was loss of life or circumstances attracting unusual attention:

Persia—British liner, torpedoed or mined and sunk in Mediterranean Dec. 30, 1915; 335 lives lost; two Americans.

Clan MacFarlane—British steamer, sunk in Mediterranean Dec. 30, 1915; thirteen lives lost.

Brindisi—Italian steamship, sunk by mine in Adriatic Jan. 6, 1916; 242 lives lost; one American.

Bayo—Spanish steamship, struck mine and sank in Bay of Biscay Jan. 13; twenty-four lives lost.

Maloja—British steamship, torpedoed and sunk in British channel Feb. 27; 155 lives lost.

Silvius—Norwegian bark, torpedoed and sunk without warning in Havre roadstead March 9; three lives lost; seven Americans aboard.

Tubantia—Dutch liner, sunk by submarine in North sea March 16; several Americans aboard.

Berwindvale—British steamer, sunk off Ireland March 16; four Americans aboard.

Sussex—Full details of attack on this steamer are given in the diplomatic correspondence printed on another page.

Manchester Engineer—Torpedoed and sunk without warning March 27; two Americans aboard.

Zent—British liner, sunk without warning April 5; forty-eight lives lost.

Chantala—British liner, sunk about April 8; nine lives lost.

Santanderino—Spanish steamer, torpedoed and sunk about April 10; four lives lost.

Rio Branco—Brazilian steamship, sunk by submarine near English coast May 2.

Cynric—British liner, torpedoed without warning near Irish coast May 8; five lives lost; no Americans aboard.

Dubrovnik—Austrian passenger ship torpedoed in Adriatic May 9; eleven lives lost.

Mira—French coasting steamer, torpedoed and sunk in Mediterranean May 16; all on board lost.

Batavier V.—Dutch steamer, torpedoed or sunk by mine in North sea May 16; four lives lost; one American.

Mercury—Russian passenger steamer, sunk by mine in Black sea in May; 400 lives lost.

Koenigin Wilhelmina—Dutch steamer, sunk in North sea July 31; three of crew killed; several Americans aboard.

Letimbro—Italian mail steamer, torpedoed and sunk in Mediterranean about Aug. 2; many lives lost.

Kelvina—British steamer, sunk by mine or torpedo Sept. 2; twenty-eight Americans aboard.

Anlaunia—British liner, sunk in English channel Oct. 19; twenty-one Americans aboard.

Marina—British steamship, torpedoed 100 miles west of Cape Clear Oct. 28; no warning given; nineteen lives lost; six of dead Americans.

Angheliki—Greek steamer, torpedoed and sunk without warning Oct. 30; fifty lives lost.

Lanao—American steamer, sunk off coast of Portugal by German submarine Oct. 28.

Arabia—British liner, torpedoed and sunk in Mediterranean without warning Nov. 6; two lives lost; one American aboard.

Columbian—American steamship, shelled and sunk by German submarine off Spanish coast Nov. 7.

Cheung—American steamer, sunk by German submarine on the coast of Andalusia Nov. 26; ship goes down with American flag flying; no lives lost.

Palermo—Italian steamship, sunk off Spanish coast Dec. 4; twenty-five Americans aboard.

The losses of the world's merchant marine from submarine attacks and mines in the first two years of the war were estimated by French statisticians to have been 2,536,000 tons, divided as follows:

Entente allies.....1,994,000

Central powers.....212,000

Neutrals.....330,000

Total losses.....2,536,000

These losses were divided as follows:

England.....1,623,000

France.....203,000

Italy.....85,000

Russia.....42,000

Belgium.....25,000

Japan.....16,000

Germany.....177,000

Turkey.....18,000

Norway.....115,000

Holland.....85,000

Denmark.....40,000

Sweden.....43,000

Greece.....21,000

Spain.....16,000

United States.....10,000

Austria.....17,000

The New York Journal of Commerce published figures Nov. 3 showing that 1,820 merchant ships with an aggregate gross tonnage of approximately 3,328,584 had been sunk by belligerent nations during twenty-seven months of war ending Nov. 1, 1916. The losses during October were larger than for any one of the preceding five months, amounting to 127 vessels of a total of 227,116 tons gross.

SINKING OF THE LINER PERSIA.

The Peninsular and Oriental liner Persia was sunk in the Mediterranean Thursday afternoon, Dec. 30, 1915, when about forty miles south of the east end of the island of Crete. It was on its way from London to Bombay with 184 passengers and a crew of 317, making a total of 501 on board. At 1:10 p. m. on the date named the vessel was either torpedoed or struck a mine; the explosion was so violent that in five minutes the ship went to the bottom, taking with it 335 persons. Only five lifeboats could be lowered and these containing the survivors were picked up after about thirty hours by a British cruiser and a Holt liner. Most of those saved were landed at Alexandria, Egypt, Jan. 1, and the others a day later at Malta. They included about a score of women.

Two American citizens were lost with the Persia. One was Robert N. McNeely, who was on his way to Aden, Arabia, to take up his duties as American consul. The other was the Rev. Homer R. Sallsbury, a missionary, who was on his way to India.

While it was the opinion of the survivors that the Persia had been torpedoed no one had seen a submarine and in reply to the inquiries made by the American state department both Germany and Austria-Hungary denied that any submarine of theirs had sunk the liner. In the absence of proof that the Persia had been sunk by an underwater boat no action could be taken looking to reparation for the loss of American lives or the enforcement of principle insisted upon by the United States in the Lusitania case.

The Persia displaced 7,974 tons, was 493 feet long and had a fifty-eight foot beam. Its commander was H. S. Bradshaw.

Distribution of lost and saved on the Persia:

	Aboard.	Saved.	Drown'd.
Passengers	184	65	119
European crew.....	81	31	50
Lascars crew.....	236	70	166

EXPLOITS OF THE U-53.

The German war submarine U-53, commanded by Lieut.-Capt. Hans Rose, arrived in Newport harbor at Newport, R. I., Saturday afternoon, Oct. 7, 1916. Capt. Rose made formal calls on Rear-Admiral Knight and Rear-Admiral Gleaves, mailed a letter to the German ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, inquired after the merchant submarine Bremen and then after a stay of three hours departed. At 5:30 Sunday morning it stopped and examined the American steamer Kansan, but permitted it to go. When just outside the three-mile limit off Nantucket it stopped, torpedoed and sank the Strathdene, a British freighter; the West Point, a British freighter; the Stephano, a British passenger liner; the Bloomersdijk, a Dutch freighter, and the Christian Knudsen, a Norwegian freighter. The people on board each ship were given time to get into small boats. Many were rescued by American destroyers which had been summoned by wireless. The incident caused some commotion at the time, but no official action was taken.

ARMORED TRACTORS OR TANKS IN WAR.

Heavily armored and powerful automobiles of a new type were first used in the battle of the Somme on the French front early in September, 1916. They were huge tractors with wheels of the "caterpillar" type and were able to go up and down hill, cross trenches and batter down obstructions. Two of them were used in attacking the line from Combes to Morval and were quite successful. Their crews, armed with machine guns and rifles, were able to advance to and across the enemy trenches and to enfilade their lines. The Germans attacked the cars with machine gun and rifle fire, as well as grenades, but without seriously damaging either the tractors or their crews. The unexpected appearance of these new engines of war caused consternation among the Germans, many of whom surrendered. Owing to their peculiar shape the armored cars were called by various names such as "tanks," "toads," "land ships" and so on. They were most commonly known as "tanks." They were used in other engagements with more or less success and the Germans were so impressed with them that they ordered cars of a similar type to be built at Essen and sent to the army.

EXECUTION OF CAPT. FRYATT.

Capt. Charles Fryatt, commander of the Great Eastern Railway company's liner Brussels, was executed by the Germans in Bruges, Belgium, July 27, 1916, under circumstances which caused his case to be compared with that of Miss Edith Cavell, the British nurse who was executed in Brussels, Belgium, Oct. 12, 1915. The official German account of the affair was as follows: "On Thursday (July 27) at Bruges, before the court-martial of the marine corps, the trial took place of Capt.

CAPT. CHARLES FRYATT.

Charles Fryatt of the British steamer Brussels, which was brought in as a prize. The accused was condemned to death because, although he was not a member of a combatant force, he made an attempt on the afternoon of March 28, 1915, to ram the German submarine U-33 near the Maas lightship. The accused as well as the first officer and the chief engineer of the steamer received at the time from the British admiralty a gold watch as a reward for his brave conduct on that occasion and his action was mentioned with praise in the house of commons.

"On the occasion in question, disregarding the U boat's signal to stop and show his national flag, he turned at a critical moment at high speed on the submarine, which escaped the steamer by a few meters only by immediately diving. He confessed that in so doing he had acted in accordance with the instructions of the admiralty. The sentence was confirmed yesterday (Thursday) afternoon and carried out by shooting. One of the many nefarious franc-tireur proceedings of the British merchant marine against our war vessels has thus found a belated but merited expiation."

Though efforts were made by James W. Gerard, American ambassador to Germany, on behalf of the British government to secure a postponement of the trial and to have the captain represented by competent counsel, they were without effect. The ambassador was informed through the German foreign office that no postponement could be granted because the witnesses from the German submarine could not be further detained. He was also informed that a Maj. Neumann, an attorney and justizrat (counselor of justice) in civil life, had been named to defend Capt. Fryatt. Details of the trial and execution were withheld. It was said that the captain was sentenced in the morning and was shot toward afternoon in an open space on the harbor premises.

The Brussels, which Capt. Fryatt commanded, had been plying between Harwich and the Hook of Holland carrying passengers across the English channel. It was captured June 23 by German warships and taken to Zeebrugge, the officers and crew being confined at Ruhleben, a civilian internment camp. It did not become known until the middle of July that the captain was to be tried on the charge of attempting to ram a German submarine, while he was commander of the steamer Wrexham. The British government then sought to secure counsel for him with the result already noted. Foreign Secretary Grey asked the American ambassador in London, Walter Hines Page, to inform Ambassador Gerard in Berlin that the British government was satisfied that in committing the act impugned Capt. Fryatt acted legitimately in self-defense for the purpose of evading capture or destruction. The secretary's communication to Mr. Page continued:

"His majesty's government considered that the act of a merchant ship in steering for an enemy submarine and forcing it to dive is essentially defensive, and precisely on the same footing as the use by a defensively armed vessel of its defensive armament in order to resist capture, which both the United States government and his majesty's government hold to be the exercise of an undoubted right."

It was contended by the British authorities that Capt. Fryatt and his subordinate officers, under the terms of the German prize regulations, should have been treated as prisoners of war. German officials, on the other hand, held that under the prize regulations adopted before the war began merchantmen were not entitled to commit acts of war and were liable to be treated as pirates if they attempted to do so.

Great indignation was caused in England and all parts of the empire at the execution of Capt. Fryatt. In the house of commons, July 31, Prime Minister Asquith denounced the execution as an atrocious crime against the law of nations and the usages of war. On Aug. 16, in replying to a question in the house of commons, he said the government was determined that "this country will not tolerate a resumption of diplomatic relations with Germany after the war until reparation is made for the murder of Capt. Fryatt."

AMERICANS ON ARMED MERCHANTMEN ACTION IN CONGRESS.

Beginning early in January, 1916, there was much discussion in both houses of congress on the advisability of warning Americans not to travel on armed merchantmen or liners belonging to belligerent powers, a considerable number of senators and representatives believing, contrary to the views held by President Wilson, that this would help to keep the United States out of the European war without any sacrifice of American rights or dignity.

Senator William J. Stone (dem.) of Missouri, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee; Henry D. Flood (dem.), chairman of the house committee on foreign affairs, and Senator John W. Kern (dem.) of Indiana called on the president Feb. 21 and advised him that there was a strong sentiment in congress in favor of warning American citizens to keep off armed merchantmen flying the flags of the nations at war. Feb. 24 Senator Stone addressed a letter to the president in which, after reciting his understanding of Mr. Wilson's attitude, he said in part:

"I have counseled all who have talked with me to keep cool; that this whole business is still the subject of diplomacy and that you are striving to the utmost to bring about some peaceable adjustment, and that in the meantime congress should be careful not to 'ball up' a diplomatic situation by any kind of hasty and ill-considered action. However, the situation in congress is such as to excite a sense of deep concern in the minds of careful and thoughtful men.

"I have felt that it is due to you to say this much. I think you understand my personal attitude with respect to this subject. As much and deeply as I would hate to radically disagree with you, I find it difficult from my sense of duty and responsibility to consent to plunge this nation into the vortex of this world war because of the unreasonable obstinacy of any of the powers upon the one hand, or, on the other hand, of foolhardiness, amounting to a sort of moral treason against the republic, of our people recklessly risking their lives on armed belligerent ships. I cannot escape the conviction that such would be so monstrous as to be indefensible."

To this letter President Wilson returned the following reply on the same day:

"My Dear Senator: I very warmly appreciate your kind and frank letter of to-day and feel that it calls for an equally frank reply.

"You are right in assuming that I shall do everything in my power to keep the United States out of war. I think the country will feel no uneasiness about my course in that respect. Through many anxious months I have striven for that object, amidst difficulties more manifold than can have been apparent upon the surface, and so far I have succeeded. I do not doubt that I shall continue to succeed. The course which the central European powers have announced their intention of following in the future with regard to undersea warfare seems for the moment to threaten insuperable obstacles, but its apparent meaning is so manifestly inconsistent with explicit assurances recently given us by those powers with regard to their treatment of merchant vessels on the high seas that I must believe that explanations will presently ensue which will put a different aspect upon it. We have had no reason to question their good faith or their fidelity to their promises in the past and I for one feel confident that we shall have none in the future.

"But in any event our duty is clear. No nation, no group of nations, has the right while war is in progress to alter or disregard the principles which all nations have agreed upon in mitigation of the horrors and sufferings of war; and if the clear rights of American citizens should ever unhappily be abridged or denied by any such action we should, it seems to me, have in honor no choice as to what our own course should be.

"For my own part I cannot consent to any abridgment of the rights of American citizens in any respect. The honor and self-respect of the nation are involved. We covet peace and shall preserve it at any cost but the loss of honor. To forbid our people to exercise their rights for fear we might be called upon to vindicate them would be a deep humiliation indeed. It would be an implicit, all but an explicit, acquiescence in the violation of the rights of mankind everywhere and of whatever nation or allegiance. It would be a deliberate abdication of our hitherto proud position as spokesmen, even amidst the turmoil of war, for the law and the right. It would make everything this government has attempted, and everything that it has achieved during this terrible struggle of nations, meaningless and futile.

"It is important to reflect that if in this instance we allowed expediency to take the place of principle the door would inevitably be opened to still further concessions. Once accept a single abatement of right and many other humiliations would certainly follow, and the whole fine fabric of international law might crumble under our hands piece by piece. What we are contending for in this matter is of the very essence of the things that have made America a sovereign nation. She cannot yield them without conceding her own impotency as a nation, and making virtual surrender of her independent position among the nations of the world.

"I am speaking, my dear senator, in deep solemnity, without heat, with a clear consciousness of the high responsibilities of my office, and as your sincere and devoted friend. If we should unhappily differ, we shall differ as friends; but where issues so momentous as these are involved we must, just because we are friends, speak our minds without reservation.

"Faithfully yours, WOODROW WILSON."

M'LEMORE RESOLUTION.

On Feb. 22 the following resolution was introduced in the house of representatives by Jeff McLeMore (dem.) of Texas:

"Whereas, the governments of two of the powers at present in war in Europe and on the high seas have informed all neutral powers of their intention to instruct the commanders of their submarine naval vessels to attack upon sight after Feb. 29 all armed vessels of their enemies, whether such armed vessels are admittedly naval vessels or carry their armament under the name and guise of 'defensive armament for merchant ships'; and

"Whereas, the government of Germany, one of the powers which have so informed the neutral powers, has submitted to the government of the United States photographic facsimiles of alleged secret orders of the British government, which secret orders direct that such so-called 'defensive armament for merchant ships' shall be used offensively and shall be manned and directed by naval officers and men of the navy of Great Britain, and that such so-called 'defensive armament for merchant ships' and such naval officers and men shall be, so far as possible, concealed and disguised when in neutral waters and ports, with the evident intention to deceive; and

"Whereas, the only possible use for a 'defensive gun' is the same as the use for an 'offensive gun', namely, to shoot and if possible destroy or damage the enemy ship, whether submarine or other naval craft; and

"Whereas, the government of the United States has neither the desire nor the right to dictate to any of the powers whether they shall arm their merchant ships with guns or other armament or not and has no interest in the success or failure of such ships so armed in using their armaments in the only way in which they could be effectively used, namely, in destroying or injuring enemy submarines or other naval vessels; and

"Whereas, the government of the United States has no interest in the success or failure of the submarines or other naval vessels of any power in escaping or destroying such merchant ships so armed and has no desire or right to dictate to any of the powers what steps they shall take to protect their vital interests and pursue their legitimate belligerent operations; and

"Whereas, the government of the United States cannot look upon any naval engagement between any armed ships of opposing belligerent powers, no matter how such ships, or any one of such ships, may be designated or disguised, as other than a naval engagement undertaken by each belligerent with the purpose of destroying the other belligerent ships and the lives of the people thereon; and

"Whereas, while it is indifferent as to quibbles about such terms as 'offensive' and 'defensive' as applied to guns on ships of powers at war, the government of the United States is vitally concerned to offer its own citizens the best possible advice, counsel and assistance in avoiding the hazards of war; and

"Whereas, the governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary have given the government of the United States positive assurance that unarmed ships carrying chiefly nonbelligerent passengers will not be sunk—unless while resisting the right of visit and search—unless it is certain that the nonbelligerent passengers can be removed to a place of safety; and

"Whereas, the government of the United States is vitally interested in preserving to its own warships, submarines and other war vessels full necessary freedom of action against an enemy, whether avowed or disguised, in any possible future war: therefore be it

"Resolved, That the house of representatives of the sixty-fourth congress of the United States do, and it hereby solemnly does, request the president to warn all American citizens, within the borders of the United States or its possessions or elsewhere, to refrain from traveling on any and all ships of any and all of the powers now or in future at war, which ship or ships shall mount guns, whether such ship be frankly avowed a part of the naval forces of the power whose flag it flies or shall be called a merchant ship, or otherwise, and whether such gun or guns or other armament be called 'offensive' or 'defensive'; and in case American citizens do travel on such armed belligerent ships, that they do so at their own risk.

"That when the president of the United States or the secretary of state shall come into possession of the actual memorandum of the German government, containing photographic facsimiles of alleged, secret instructions issued by the British government, which alleged secret instructions direct that so-called 'defensive armament for merchant ships' shall be used offensively, and that so-called 'defensive armament for merchant ships' shall be manned and directed by naval officers and men of the navy of Great Britain, and that such so-called 'defensive armament for merchant ships' and such naval officers and men shall be as far as possible concealed and disguised when in neutral waters and ports, with the evident intention to deceive the president of the United States or the secretary of state, he shall at the earliest possible moment transmit such actual memorandum of the German government, with such facsimiles of alleged secret instructions of the British government, and with all appendices whatsoever, to the speaker of the house, that it and they may be laid before the house for its full information and for its assistance in performing its duty and function of guarding the welfare of the country and its citizens and for its assistance in performing its constitutional duty of advising the president of the United States with regard to foreign relations.

"That the house expresses the determination of the people and government of the United States both to uphold all American rights and to exercise care, consideration and wisdom in avoiding actions which tend to bring American citizens and American interests into the zone of conflict where the passions of war are raging.

The resolution was referred to the committee on foreign affairs and it might not have been reported back to the house if the president had not insisted on action for reasons given in the following letter addressed by him Feb. 29 to Edward Pou (dem.), a member of the house committee on rules:

"Inasmuch as I learn that Mr. Henry, the chairman of the committee on rules, is absent in Texas, I take the liberty of calling your attention, as ranking member of the committee, to a matter of grave consequence to the country, which can, I believe, be handled under the rules of the house only by that committee.

"The report that there are divided counsels in congress in regard to the foreign policy of the government is being made industriously use of in foreign capitals. I believe that report to be false, but so long as it is anywhere credited it cannot fail to do the greatest harm and expose the country to the most serious risks.

"I therefore feel justified in asking that your committee will permit me to urge an early vote upon the resolutions with regard to travel on armed merchant ships, which recently have been so much talked about, in order that there may be afforded an immediate opportunity for full public discussion and action upon them, and that all doubts and conjectures may be swept away and our foreign relations once more cleared of damaging misunderstandings.

"The matter is of so grave importance and lies so clearly within the field of executive initiative that I venture to hope that your committee will not think that I am taking unwarranted liberty in making this suggestion as to the business of the house, and I very earnestly commend it to their immediate consideration."

Mr. Flood (dem.), from the committee on foreign affairs, reported the resolution back without amendment March 4 with the recommendation that it be laid on the table. March 7 Mr. Pou, from the committee on rules, offered a resolution that the house proceed to the consideration of the McLemore resolution and that after four hours of general debate it be considered under the general rules of the house. After a debate of an hour and a half the previous question was ordered by a vote of 256 yeas to 160 nays and then the rule reported by the committee on rules was adopted by a vote of 270 yeas to 137 nays. The McLemore resolution was then debated under the rule, after

GORE RESOLUTION.
In the senate Feb. 25 the following concurrent resolution was offered by Senator Thomas P. Gore (dem.) of Oklahoma:
"Whereas, a number of leading powers of the world are now engaged in a war of unexampled proportions; and

"Whereas, the United States is happily at peace with all of the belligerent nations; and

"Whereas, it is equally the desire and the interest of the American people to remain at peace with all nations; and

"Whereas, the president has recently afforded fresh and signal proofs of the superiority of diplomacy to butchery as a method of settling international disputes; and

"Whereas, the right of American citizens to travel on unarmed belligerent vessels has recently received renewed guaranties of respect and inviolability; and

"Whereas, the right of American citizens to travel on armed belligerent vessels rather than upon unarmed vessels is essential neither to their life, liberty or safety, nor to the independence, dignity or security of the United States; and

"Whereas, congress alone has been vested with the power to declare war, which involves the obligations to prevent war by all proper means consistent with the honor and vital interest of the nation: now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the senate (the house of representatives concurring). That it is the sense of the congress, vested as it is with the sole power to declare war, that all persons owing allegiance to the United States should, in behalf of their own safety and the vital interest of the United States, forbear to exercise the right to travel as passengers upon any armed vessel of any belligerent power, whether such vessel be armed for offensive or defensive purposes; and it is the further sense of the congress that no passport should be issued or renewed by the secretary of state or by any one acting under him to be used by any person owing allegiance to the United States for purpose of travel upon any armed vessel of a belligerent power."

When the resolution came before the senate for action March 3 Senator Gore substituted for the resolving clause the following:

"Resolved, by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), that the sinking by a submarine without notice or warning of an armed merchant vessel of her public enemy, resulting in the death of a citizen of the United States, would constitute a just and sufficient cause of war between the United States and the German empire."

Senator Porter J. McCumber (rep.) of North Dakota offered as a substitute a resolution the substance of which was that while the strict legal right of an American citizen to travel and ship his goods on an armed merchant vessel might be an established right it was none the less the moral and patriotic duty of every American citizen, in view of the desperate character of the warfare raging in Europe, to refrain from needlessly exposing himself to danger, and by his recklessness or audacity involving his country in a conflict that might seriously affect the welfare of 100,000,000 of his fellow citizens.

Senator Wesley L. Jones (rep.) of Washington also introduced a substitute resolution which, omitting its preamble, was as follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the senate of the United States of America that any issue claimed to affect the national honor should be referred for its decision to the congress of the United States, and no ultimatum should be sent to any belligerent power and no severance of diplomatic relations be brought about by executive action until after the advice and consent of congress."

Both the McCumber and Jones resolutions were subsequently withdrawn. Senator Ollie M. James (dem.) of Kentucky moved that the Gore resolution and all substitutes for it and amendments to it be laid on the table. The motion was adopted by the following vote:

WILSON ADDRESSES CONGRESS.

As the weeks passed and more and more attacks by German submarines were made on merchantmen and passenger vessels, in many cases without any warning being given, the strain upon the peaceful relations between Germany and the United States became greater. When the French channel steamer Sussex was torpedoed March 24, with the killing or wounding of about eighty of the 325 or more passengers aboard, the victims including a number of American citizens, the diplomatic situation became serious. After an exhaustive examination into all the circumstances of the case and finding that the Sussex had unquestionably been torpedoed by a German submarine without warning President Wilson and Secretary Lansing felt that the assurances given in the Lusitania case had been disregarded. They thereupon sent a note to the German government April 18, which was so emphatic in its tone that it was generally regarded as an ultimatum. (See "American Diplomatic Correspondence" under subtitle "Torpedoing of the Sussex" in this volume.) President Wilson arranged for a joint session of congress and April 19 appeared before it in person and read a message in which he explained in detail his reasons for taking a step which might lead to the gravest consequences. He said:

"Gentlemen of the congress: A situation has arisen in the foreign relations of the country of which it is my plain duty to inform you very frankly.

"It will be recalled that in February, 1915, the imperial German government announced its intention to treat the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as embraced within the seat of war, and to destroy all merchant ships owned by its enemies that might be found within any part of that portion of the high seas, and that it warned all vessels of neutral as well as of belligerent ownership to keep out of the waters it had thus proscribed, or else enter them at their peril.

"The government of the United States earnestly protested. It took the position that such a policy could not be pursued without the practical certainty of gross and palpable violations of the law of nations, particularly if submarine craft were to be employed as its instruments, inasmuch as the rules prescribed by that law, rules founded upon principles of humanity and established for the protection of the lives of noncombatants at sea, could not in the nature of the case be observed by such vessels. It based its protest on the ground that persons of neutral nationality and vessels of neutral ownership would be exposed to extreme and intolerable risks, and that no right to close any part of the high seas against their use or to expose them to such risks could lawfully be asserted by any belligerent government.

"The law of nations in these matters, upon which the government of the United States based its protest, is not of recent origin or founded upon merely arbitrary principles set up by convention. It is based, on the contrary, upon manifest and imperative principles of humanity and has long been established with the approval and by the express assent of all civilized nations.

"Notwithstanding the earnest protest of our government, the imperial German government at once proceeded to carry out the policy it had announced. It expressed the hope that the dangers involved, at any rate the dangers to neutral vessels, would be reduced to a minimum by the instructions which it had issued to its submarine commanders, and assured the government of the United States that it would take every possible precaution, both to respect the rights of neutrals and to safeguard the lives of non-combatants.

"What has actually happened in the year which has since elapsed has shown that these hopes were not justified and these assurances insusceptible of being fulfilled. In pursuance of the policy of submarine warfare against the commerce of its adversaries, thus announced and entered upon by the imperial German government in spite of the solemn protest of this government, the commanders of German undersea vessels have attacked merchant ships with greater and greater activity, not only upon the high seas surrounding Great Britain and Ireland but wherever they could encounter them, in a way that has grown more and more ruthless, more and more indiscriminate as the months have gone by, less and less observant of restraints of any kind, and have delivered their attacks without compunction against vessels of every nationality and bound upon every sort of errand.

"Vessels of neutral ownership, even vessels of neutral ownership bound from neutral port to neutral port, have been destroyed along with vessels of belligerent ownership in constantly increasing numbers. Sometimes the merchantman attacked has been warned and summoned to surrender before being fired on or torpedoed; sometimes passengers or crews have been vouchsafed the poor security of being allowed to take to the ship's boats before she was sent to the bottom. But again and again no warning has been given; no escape even to the ship's boats allowed to those on board.

"What this government foresaw must happen has happened. Tragedy has followed tragedy on the seas in such fashion, with such attendant circumstances, as to make it grossly evident that warfare of such a sort, if warfare it be, cannot be carried on without the most palpable violation of the dictates alike of right and humanity. Whatever the disposition and intention of the imperial German government, it has manifestly proved impossible for it to keep such methods of attack upon the commerce of its enemies within the bounds set by either the reason or the heart of mankind.

"In February of the present year the imperial German government informed this government and the other neutral governments of the world that it had reason to believe that the government of Great Britain had armed all merchant vessels of British ownership and had given them secret orders to attack any submarine of the enemy they might encounter upon the seas, and that the imperial German government felt justified in the circumstances in treating all merchantmen of belligerent ownership as auxiliary vessels of war, which it would have the right to destroy without warning.

"The law of nations has long recognized the right of merchantmen to carry arms for protection and to use them to repel attack, though to use them, in such circumstances, at their own risks; but the imperial German government claimed the right to set these understandings aside under circumstances which it deemed extraordinary. Even the terms in which it announced its purpose thus still further to relax the restraints it had previously professed its willingness and desire to put upon the operations of its submarines carried the plain implication that at least vessels which were not armed would still be exempt from destruction without warning and that personal safety would be accorded their passengers and crews; but even this limitation, if it was ever practicable to observe it, has in fact constituted no check at all upon the destruction of ships of every sort.

"Again and again the imperial German government has given this government its solemn assurance that at least passenger ships would not be thus dealt with, and yet it has again and again permitted its undersea commanders to disregard those assurances with entire impunity. Great liners like the Lusitania and the Arabic and mere ferryboats like the Sussex have been attacked without a moment's warning, sometimes before they had even become aware that they were in the presence of an armed vessel of the enemy, and the lives of noncombatants, passengers and crew, have been sacrificed wholesale, in a manner which the government of the United States cannot but regard as wanton and without the slightest color of justification.

"No limit of any kind has in fact been set to the indiscriminate pursuit and destruction of merchantmen of all kinds and nationalities within the waters, constantly extending in area, where these operations have been carried on, and the roll of Americans who have lost their lives on ships thus attacked and destroyed has grown month by month until the ominous toll has mounted into the hundreds.

"One of the latest and most shocking instances of this method of warfare was that of the destruction of the French cross channel steamer Sussex. It must stand forth, as the sinking of the steamer Lusitania did, as so singularly tragic and unjustifiable as to constitute a truly terrible example of the inhumanity of submarine warfare as the commanders of German vessels have for the last twelve months been conducting it.

"If this instance stood alone, some explanation, some disavowal by the German government, some evidence of criminal mistake or willful disobedience on the part of the commander of the vessel that fired the torpedo might be sought or entertained; but, unhappily, it does not stand alone. Recent events make the conclusion inevitable that it is only one instance, even though it be one of the most extreme and distressing instances, of the spirit and method of warfare which the imperial German government has mistakenly adopted and which from the first exposed that government to the reproach of thrusting all neutral rights aside in pursuit of its immediate objects.

"The government of the United States has been very patient. At every stage of this distressing experience of tragedy after tragedy in which its own citizens were involved it has sought to be restrained from any extreme course of action or of protest by a thoughtful consideration of the extraordinary circumstances of this unprecedented war, and actuated in all that it said or did by the sentiments of genuine friendship which the people of the United States always have entertained and continue to entertain toward the German nation. It has, of course, accepted the successive explanations and assurances of the imperial German government as given in entire sincerity and good faith, and has hoped, even against hope, that it would prove to be possible for the German government so to order and control the acts of its naval commanders as to square its policy with the principles of humanity as embodied in the law of nations. It has been willing to wait until the significance of the facts became absolutely unmistakable and susceptible of but one interpretation.

"That point has now unhappily been reached.

The facts are susceptible of but one interpretation. The imperial German government has not been able to put any limits or restraints upon its warfare against either freight or passenger ships. It has therefore become painfully evident that the position which this government took at the very outset is inevitable—namely, that the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment of course involves, incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals and the sacred immunities of noncombatants.

"I have deemed it my duty, therefore, to say to the imperial German government that if it is still its purpose to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines, notwithstanding the now demonstrated impossibility of conducting that warfare in accordance with what the government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue, and that unless the imperial German government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, this government can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the government of the German empire altogether.

"This decision I have arrived at with the keenest regret; the possibility of the action contemplated I am sure all thoughtful Americans will look forward to with unaffected reluctance. But we cannot forget that we are in some sort and by the force of circumstances the responsible spokesmen of the rights of humanity, and that we cannot remain silent while those rights seem in process of being swept utterly away in the maelstrom of this terrible war. We owe it to a due regard for our own rights as a nation, to our sense of duty as a representative of the rights of neutrals the world over, and to a just conception of the rights of mankind to take this stand now with the utmost solemnity and firmness.

"I have taken it and taken it in the confidence that it will meet with your approval and support. All sober minded men must unite in hoping that the imperial German government, which has in other circumstances stood as the champion of all that we are now contending for in the interest of humanity, may recognize the justice of our demands and meet them in the spirit in which they are made."

CRISIS IS ENDED.

Until May 4, when a reply was finally received from the German foreign office announcing that no more merchant vessels would be sunk "without warning and without saving human lives," the crisis remained acute. The answer of the German government, however, was accepted as satisfactory in the main by the administration in Washington and thereafter the diplomatic situation became normal. No action was taken by congress except greatly to amplify the measures for the national defense. These are given at length elsewhere in this issue of The Almanac and Year-Book.

PLOTS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Plans laid and carried out in America to aid the belligerents in Europe were not as many nor as serious as in 1915. There were a number of suspicious explosions in powder and ammunition factories and various persons were indicted for attempting to violate the customs laws by shipping contraband rubber to Germany. In San Francisco Franz Bopp, German consul-general, Baron George Wilhelm von Brincken and thirty other individuals were indicted for alleged plotting against shipping. Ernest Schiller, a German stowaway, single handed took possession of the British freighter Matoppo off Sandy Hook

March 29 and held it for nearly a day. It signaled for assistance and Schiller, while trying to escape in a small boat, was caught. He was tried and sentenced to life imprisonment for piracy.

Wolf von Igel, secretary of Franz von Papen, former military attache to the German embassy in Washington, was indicted April 17 on the charge of conspiring to blow up the Welland canal. He was arrested the next day. Papers were seized which were said to prove that Capt. von Papen had been concerned in the plot. The German embassy in Washington demanded that Igel be released and the papers restored, but the demand was resisted by the department of justice.

Lieut. Robert Fay of the German army was tried and convicted in New York in May on the charge of conspiring to destroy munition ships of the allies by bomb contrivances. He was sentenced to serve eight years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. Walter Scholz and Paul Daech were sentenced to four and two years respectively on the same charge. Fay escaped from prison Aug. 29.

PADRAIC H. PEARSE. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

From Monday, April 24, to Sunday, May 1, 1916, Dublin was the scene of an insurrection against British authority by a considerable number of disaffected persons who had been influenced by the Sinn Féin society and other agencies, both in and out of Ireland, to attempt the organization of an Irish republic. The aims of the leaders of the revolt were set forth in the following proclamation issued April 24:

"The provisional government of the Irish republic to the people of Ireland:

"Irishmen and Irishwomen, in the name of God and of the dead generations from which you received the old traditions of nationhood, Ireland, through us, summons her children to her flag and strikes for her freedom, having organized and trained her manhood through her secret revolutionary organization, the Irish republican brotherhood and through open military organization, the Irish Volunteers and the Irish citizenry.

"Having partly perfected their discipline and resolutely waited for the right moment to reveal itself, she now seizes that moment and, supported by her exiled children in America and by her gallant allies in Europe, but relying on her own strength, she strikes, in full confidence of victory.

"We declare the right of the people of Ireland to the ownership of Ireland and to unfettered control of Irish destinies to be sovereign and indefeasible. Long usurpation of that right by a foreign people and government has not extinguished that right, nor can it ever be extinguished except by the destruction of the Irish people.

"In every generation the Irish people have asserted their right to national freedom and sovereignty. Six times during the past 300 years they have asserted it in arms. Standing on that fundamental right and again asserting it in arms in the face of the world, we hereby proclaim the Irish republic as a sovereign independent state and we pledge our lives and the lives of our comrades in arms to the cause of its freedom, its welfare and its exaltation among nations.

"The Irish republic is entitled to and hereby claims the allegiance of every Irishman and Irishwoman. The republic guarantees religious and civil liberty, equal rights and equal opportunities to all its citizens and declares its resolve to pursue the happiness and prosperity of the whole nation and of its parts, cherishing all the children of the nation equally and oblivious of the differences carefully fostered by an alien government, which have divided the minority from the majority in the past.

"Until our arms have brought the opportune moment for the establishment of a permanent national government, representative of the whole people of Ireland and elected by the suffrages of all her men and women, the provisional government hereby constituted will administer the civil and military affairs of the republic in trust for the people.

"We place the cause of the Irish republic under the protection of the most high God, whose blessing we invoke upon our arms, and we pray that no one who serves that cause will dishonor it by cowardice, inhumanity or rapine. In this supreme hour the Irish nation must by its valor and discipline and by the readiness of its children to sacrifice themselves for the common good prove itself worthy of the august destiny to which it is called.

"Signed in behalf of the provisional government: Thomas J. Clarke, S. MacDiarmid, Thomas MacDonagh, P. H. Pearse, E. Ceannt, James Connolly, Joseph Plunkett."

The revolutionists named Padraic H. Pearse as provisional president of the republic and James Connolly as commander of the rebel forces in the Dublin district. The first action of the insurgents was to seize the general postoffice, killing those who resisted them. They also occupied the city hall, Liberty hall, many houses in Sackville street and Stephen's Green. British soldiers in uniform, constables and others were shot down. An attempt was made to take Dublin castle, but it failed. "Sniping" from windows was indulged in and a number of citizens fell victims.

In the meantime the imperial military authorities were not idle. Troops were hastily summoned from England and various parts of Ireland and the part of Dublin occupied by the insurgents was surrounded by a strong cordon of troops. Liberty hall was shelled by a gunboat in the Liffey and subsequently land batteries sent shells into the postoffice and other buildings in which the rebels were gathered. Fires resulted from the bombardment and before the rising was quelled 179 buildings had been destroyed, entailing a loss of $15,000,000. Among the buildings burned were the postoffice, the Metropole hotel and the office of the Freeman's Journal. The greatest destruction was in Lower Sackville street, Henry street and Abbey street. But far worse than the loss of property was the loss of life. According to official reports 304 civilians and soldiers were killed and 1,002 wounded.

On Sunday morning, May 1, the insurgents surrendered in a body and the revolution was ended, as the rest of Ireland, except for a few men at Enniscorthy and one or two other places, had refused to join in the movement. Martial law had, of course, been proclaimed in Dublin and the surrounding country, and the troops, under command of Gen. Sir John Maxwell, proceeded to arrest all the known and suspected insurgents. Many of the leaders in the revolt were tried by court-martial, sentenced to death and executed; others were sentenced to imprisonment and hundreds were deported to England, where they were confined pending investigation and trial.

Those who suffered the death penalty after trial by court-martial were:

May 3—Padraic H. Pearse, provisional president;

Thomas J. Clarke and Thomas MacDonagh.

May 4—Joseph Plunkett, Edward Daly, Michael

O'Hanrahan, William Pearse.

May 6—John McBride.

May 7—Eamonn Ceannt (Edmund Kent), Cornelius Culbert, Michael Mallon and J. J. Heuston.

May 9—Thomas Kent of Coole.

May 12—James Connolly and S. MacDiarmid.

F. Sheehy Skeffington, editor of the Irish Citizen, and two other Irish journalists were summarily executed in the Portobello barracks by Capt. Bowen-Colthurst, who was subsequently found guilty of murder after a court-martial trial. He was, however, declared to have been insane at the time of the shootings and was consequently ordered "confined during the king's pleasure."

Countess Georgiana Markiewicz, the Irish wife of a Polish nobleman, was active in the revolution and was sentenced to death, but the sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life. Jeremiah C. Lynch, a naturalized American citizen, was sentenced to death, but the penalty was changed to ten years' imprisonment.

Much dissatisfaction was caused not only in Ireland but in England by the severity of the punishment meted out to some of the lesser offenders in the revolt, for it was generally recognized that most of those engaged in it were visionaries who did not fully understand the consequences of their acts. The authorities then adopted a more lenient attitude and the executions ceased, while fewer arrests and deportations to England were permitted. The uprising, it may be added, was condemned by John E. Redmond and the majority of the influential members of the nationalist party in Ireland. That the movement had support in America and also in Germany was generally accepted as a fact, but it was also evident that it amounted to little.

Augustine Birrell, chief secretary for Ireland, was so severely censured for having permitted the revolution to come to a head that he resigned his position. Baron Wimborne, lord lieutenant of Ireland, followed his example.

SIR ROGER CASEMENT.

The most prominent man connected with the attempted revolution in Ireland and also one of the most unfortunate was Sir Roger Casement. He had been in the British consular service and though considered eccentric in his ways was considered a capable official. His sympathies were with the Irish extremists and when the European war began he went to Berlin, where, it was said, he offered his services to the government. He was given no post, but was permitted to assist in the general German propaganda and also to lay plans for an uprising in Ireland. In this he was given help to the extent that he was brought to Ireland by the submarine U-19, which conveyed a German ship loaded with arms and manned by German bluejackets. The ship was halted by the British patrol vessel Bluebell, and to prevent its capture it was sunk by its own crew, the members of which were made prisoners.

Caseement was landed by the submarine near Tralee with a companion, an Irish soldier named Bailey, but before they could get far they were arrested. This was on Friday, April 21, two days before the uprising in Dublin occurred, so that while he had been active in fomenting it he was prevented from actually taking part in it. He and his companion were taken to London and confined in the Tower. He was brought into the Bow street police station May 15 and after a preliminary examination lasting two days was held to trial on the charge of high treason. The trial began June 26 and ended June 29 in a verdict finding him guilty as charged. His defense was that he was merely organizing an Irish brigade for use against the Ulster volunteers organized by Sir Edward Carson and that this was not treason. Viscount Reading, lord chief justice of England, presided at the trial and pronounced the sentence of death. Caseement was hanged in Pentonville jail at 9 o'clock on the morning of Aug. 3.

WAR IN THE AIR.

ZEPPELIN RAIDS ON ENGLAND.

In the course of 1916 numerous raids on England were made by Zeppelin dirigible airships, some of them of a size entitling them to be called super-Zeppelins. As was the case in 1915, the victims were for the most part civilians, while the amount of damage done was comparatively small. Following is a list of some of the more important of these raids, a few of which reached the suburbs of London:

Date.	Killed.	In- jured.	Date.	Killed.	In- jured.
Jan. 3.....	1	6	Aug. 9.....	23	23
Jan. 31.....	67	117	Aug. 24.....	8	36

Several of the Zeppelins raiding England in 1916 fell victims to the improved British anti-airship defenses and never returned to Germany. While a mile of more up in the air they were hit by shots, either from aeroplanes or from anti-aircraft artillery and dropped like fiery meteors from the sky. The officers and crew, numbering more than two score for each Zeppelin, had no chance to escape but met death in a form as spectacular as it was horrible. In a few cases the craft were disabled and forced to land and the crews were made prisoners.

Following is a list of the Zeppelins destroyed in England and elsewhere in 1916:

- Feb. 3—L-19, wrecked in the North sea.
- Feb. 21—L-77, shot down by French guns near Brabant-le-Roi.
- April 1—L-15, shot down in raid on eastern counties of England and sank off Thames estuary.
- May 3—L-20, wrecked near Stavanger, Norway.
- May 4—Unnamed, destroyed by British warships off Schleswig, Denmark.
- May 5—Unnamed, brought down by allied warships at Saloniki, Greece.
- Sept. 3—L-21, burned near Enfield, England.
- Sept. 24—L-32 and L-33, brought down in Essex, England.
- Oct. 1—Unnamed, brought down near London.
- Nov. 21—Unnamed, wrecked by storm near Friedrichshaven, Germany.
- Nov. 28—Unnamed, shot down by hydroplane, over North sea near Durham coast.
- Nov. 28—Unnamed, shot down into North sea near Norfolk coast.

Two or three raids were made by Zeppelins on Paris early in the year. In one on the night of Jan. 23, twelve persons were killed and thirty injured. Such effective defense measures were taken that during the rest of the year no Zeppelins were able to approach the city.

WORK OF AEROPLANES.

In the war areas the services of aviators were in great demand throughout the year for scouting, artillery directing and raiding purposes. The airmen were exceedingly active on all the fronts in Europe, Africa and Asia. In the battle of the Somme the allies established a superiority in their air service and to this was due in no small measure their success, especially of their bombardments. Fleets of airships numbering from a score to fifty or sixty frequently started out on raiding expeditions and did much damage to naval bases like Zeebrugge and to ammunition depots and railway centers. On these occasions the bombing craft were surrounded by swift fighting planes to protect them from enemy attacks.

Among the cities aided by hostile airmen in the course of the year were Karlsruhe, Germany; Bukharest, Roumania; Saloniki, Greece, and Venice, Italy. In most of these cases many civilians were killed and considerable damage to property caused.

Numerous airmen acquired unusual skill in bringing down hostile machines and some of them became famous as air fighters. Not a few of them met the same fate as their victims. Among the better known of those who perished, either in battle or by accident, were the following:

- Lieut. Immelmann, German, June 19.
- Victor Chapman, American, June 23.
- Lieut. Kiffin Yates Rockwell, American, Sept. 23.
- Lieut. Wintgens, German, Sept. 27.
- Lieut. Mulzer, German, Sept. 29.
- Norman Prince, American, Oct. 15.
- Capt. Boelke, German, Oct. 29.

The dates given are those on which the deaths were reported and not in all cases those on which the men actually died. These were not always made public.

DEPORTATION OF FRENCH AND BELGIAN CITIZENS.

In April and May, 1916, some 25,000 French civilians, including men, women and girls, without distinction as to social condition, were forcibly removed from their homes in Lille, Turcoing and Roubaix and sent by the German authorities to work in the harvest fields and factories in the Aisne and Ardennes districts. The French government issued a White Book addressed to neutral nations protesting against these deportations as being contrary both to the laws of humanity and to the provisions of the fourth Hague convention. The Germans defended the act on the ground that there was much difficulty in properly caring for the unemployed in the congested quarters of the cities named and that it was the result of the attitude of England in making the feeding of the population difficult by its blockade policy. The French minister of war said that the men were required to work at farming, road mending, munitions making and digging trenches and that the women had to cook and wash for the soldiers. Numerous complaints were made that families were separated and that no information could be obtained as to where those deported were located. Later in the year many of the people forcibly removed from their homes were allowed to return.

CARDINAL MERCIER PROTESTS.

In October complaints began to come from Belgium that all men able to work were being removed from their homes and compelled to labor in other parts of Belgium or in Germany. These complaints increased in volume and Nov. 7 Cardinal Mercier issued a protest to the world against the deportation of Belgians to Germany for forced labor. In this protest, after citing that as early as Oct. 19 he had protested to the German governor-general against the attitude of the authorities toward the unemployed, the cardinal said in part:

"At that time the ordinances only threatened unemployed men. To-day all able-bodied men are carried off pell-mell, penned up in trucks and deported to unknown destinations, like slave gangs.

"The enemy proceeds by regions. Vague reports have reached us that arrests have been made successively at Tournai, Ghent and Alost, but we were unaware of the circumstances.

"Between Oct. 24 and the beginning of November the enemy operated in the regions of Mons, Quievain, St. Ghislain and Jemappes, from 800 to 1,200 men being rounded up daily. To-morrow and the following days he intends to fall on the Nivelles arrondissement.

"At first the Germans tried to give their measures an air of plausibility by alleging that the unemployed people in Belgium were dangerous to public order and a burden to official charity. I replied to Governor von Bissing that he himself knew well that public order was in no way endangered and that the unemployed made no demands on official charity.

"In his answer Von Bissing abandoned his previous argument and alleged that, first, the mere fact of widespread unemployment tends to burden finances, and, second, prolongation of unemployment will result in the workers' losing their technical skill.

"The situation which we denounce to the civilized world may be summed up as follows: Four hundred thousand workmen are reduced to unemployment through no fault of their own and largely inconvenient to the German occupation. Sons, husbands, fathers, respectful of public order, bow to their unhappy lot. With their most pressing needs provided for they await with dignity the end of their period of trial.

"Now, suddenly, parties of soldiers begin to enter by force these peaceful homes, tearing youth from parent, husband from wife, father from children. They bar with the bayonet the door through which wives and mothers wish to pass to say farewell to those departing. They herd their captives in groups of tens and twenties and push them into cars. As soon as the train is filled the officer in charge brusquely waves the signal for departure. Thus thousands of Belgians are being reduced to slavery.

"The Germans are not only enrolling the unemployed, but they are also recruiting a great number of men who have never been out of work."

On Nov. 16 the Belgian government made a protest through the state department in Washington against the deportations and asked for the intervention of the United States to obtain the cessation of this forcible removal of Belgian workmen into Germany and to secure the liberation of those already deported. The protest continued:

"The Germans claim that these workmen are not employed in war industries. It should be remarked, however, that they are employed in industries directly connected with the war and that the employment of this Belgian labor releases a great number of German workmen who are sent to the front. Thus these Belgian workmen are compelled practically to fight against their own country."

In the German reichstag Dec. 2 some of the socialist deputies condemned the government for its action in deporting Belgian workmen. Vice-Chancellor Helfferich in reply said:

"The setting of the unemployed Belgians to work is thoroughly consistent with international law. They are not given work which according to international law they should not perform. We are only making use of our undoubted rights."

Protests from many sources came to the neutral countries and the Vatican. Holland, Spain and the holy see advised Berlin of the painful impression made by the deportations.

AMERICAN NOTE TO GERMANY.

On Dec. 8 the state department in Washington issued the following statement:

"On Nov. 29 Mr. Grew, our charge at Berlin, was directed to obtain an interview with the German chancellor and read to him the following:

"The government of the United States has learned with the greatest concern and regret of the policy of the German government to deport from Belgium a portion of the civilian population for the purpose of forcing them to labor in Germany and is constrained to protest in a friendly spirit but most solemnly, against this action, which is in contravention of all precedents and of those humane principles of international practice which have long been accepted and followed by civilized nations in their treatment of noncombatants.

"Furthermore, the government of the United States is convinced that the effect of this policy, if pursued, will in all probability be fatal to the Belgian relief work, so humanely planned and so successfully carried out, a result which would be generally deplored, and which, it is assumed, would seriously embarrass the German government."

"The interview has taken place."

CABINET CHANGES.

Cabinet changes caused by the developments of the war were numerous and important. In Germany Admiral von Tirpitz, minister of the navy and a strong advocate of unrestricted submarine warfare, was compelled to resign in March and was succeeded by Admiral von Capelle. In May Clemens Delbrueck, minister of the interior, was succeeded by Dr. Karl Helfferich, the secretary of the imperial treasury, who in turn was succeeded by Count von Roeder. In November Gottlieb von Jagow, minister of foreign affairs, resigned and was succeeded by Dr. Alfred Zimmermann. Prior to that time Lieut.-Gen. Adolph Wild von Hohenborn, Prussian minister of war, had been replaced by Lieut.-Gen. von Stein.

In Austria the premier, Count Karl Stuergh, was assassinated. His place was taken by Dr. von Koerber, who reorganized the cabinet.

In Italy Gen. Zupelli, minister of war, was replaced in April by Gen. Morrone. In June the entire Italian cabinet headed by Premier Salandra resigned and a new coalition cabinet under Paolo Boselli was formed.

In Russia Alexei Khvostoff, minister of the interior, resigned March 19, his duties being assumed by Premier Sturmer. Gen. Pollivanoff, minister of war since the removal of Gen. Soukhomlinoff, gave way to Gen. Chouvaieff. In July Sergius Sazonoff, minister of foreign affairs, resigned and the duties of the office were taken over by Premier Sturmer. Later the place was taken by M. Neratoff. At the same time M. Khvostoff was reappointed as minister of the interior. In the latter part of November there was another radical change when Alexander Trepoff, minister of railroads, became premier. This was regarded as a victory for the liberal element in Russia.

In Greece the cabinet was changed several times. The one in power in December, 1916, was friendly to the central powers and opposed to the entente. Japan had a complete change of cabinet, Count Okuma being succeeded by Field Marshal Count Seiki Terauchi.

In Britain the first notable cabinet change was brought about by the death at sea of Earl Kitchener, minister of war. He was succeeded by David Lloyd George, whose place as minister of munitions was taken by Edwin S. Montagu. Other changes due in part to the Irish revolt and to other causes occurred in the course of the year until Dec. 5, when the entire ministry headed by Mr. Asquith resigned because of criticism of its unwieldiness and general conduct of the war. David Lloyd George, at the request of the king, constructed an entirely new cabinet with himself as prime minister. The conduct of the war was placed in the hands of a council of five of which he was one. The names of the new ministers will be found on page 154.

In France also the cabinet was reconstituted to some extent with a view to making it more efficient in its conduct of affairs connected with the war. Gen. Gallieni, minister of war, resigned in March because of ill health and was succeeded by Gen. Charles Roque. Dec. 12 it was announced that the cabinet had been reconstituted, the list of ministers then standing as follows:

Premier—Aristide Briand.
Finance—Alexandre Ribot.
War—Gen. Hubert L. Yautey.
Marine—Rear-Admiral Lacaze.
Fabrication nationale, including munitions and transportation—Albert Thomas.

The five foregoing cabinet members were to form a council of national defense.
Public instruction—Paul Painlevé.
Interior—Louis J. Maury.
Commerce and agriculture—Etienne Clementel.
National subsistence and labor—M. Herriot.
Colonies—Gaston Doumergue.
Justice and public works—Rene Viviani.

ROUMANIA JOINS THE ALLIES.

Roumania declared war on Austria-Hungary Aug. 27, 1916, after a crown council held in Bukharest. The reasons for the step were set forth in a note in which it was asserted that the triple alliance, to which Roumania was a party, was broken when Italy declared war on Austria-Hungary; that Austria-Hungary threatened the interests and national aspirations of Roumania; that Roumania was threatened with territorial and political changes endangering her future and that Roumanians in Hungary had suffered oppression. After defining the purposes of the triple alliance and declaring that this alliance no longer existed, the note continued:

"Roumania remained in the peace group of states, seeking to work in agreement in order to assure peace and to conserve the situation de facto and de jure created by treaties. Roumania then found herself in the presence of powers making war for the sole purpose of transforming from top to bottom the old arrangements which had served as a basis for their treaty of alliance. These changes were for Roumania proof that the object she pursued in joining the triple alliance no longer could be attained and that she must direct her efforts in new paths, especially as the work undertaken by Austria-Hungary threatened the interests of Roumania and her national aspirations. Consequently Roumania resumed her liberty of action.

"The neutrality which Roumania imposed upon itself in consequence of a declaration of war made independently of its will and contrary to its interests had been adopted as the result of the assurances that Austria-Hungary, in declaring war against Serbia, was not inspired by a spirit of conquest or of territorial gains. These assurances have not been realized.

"To-day we are confronted by a situation de facto threatening great territorial transformations and political changes of a nature constituting a grave menace to the future of Roumania. The work of peace, which Roumania attempted to accomplish, in a spirit of faithfulness to the triple alliance, thus was rendered barren by the very powers called upon to defend it.

"In adhering, in 1883, to the group of central powers Roumania was far from forgetting the bonds of blood constituting between them a pledge for her domestic tranquillity, as well as for the improvement of the lot of the Roumanians of Austria-Hungary. In fact, Germany and Italy, who reconstituted their states on the basic principle of nationality, could not but recognize the legitimacy of the foundation upon which their existence reposed.

"As for Austria-Hungary, she found in the friendly relations established between her and Roumania assurances of tranquillity both in her interior and on our common frontiers, for she was bound to know to what extent the discontent of her Roumanian population found echo amongst us, threatening our good relations.

"For a period of thirty years the Roumanians of Austria-Hungary not only never saw a reform introduced, but instead were treated as an inferior race and condemned to suffer the oppression of a foreign element which constitutes only a minority amidst the diverse nationalities constituting the Austro-Hungarian states.

"Roumania, from a desire to hasten the end of the conflict and to safeguard her racial interests, sees herself forced to enter into line by the side of those who are able to assure her realization of her national unity. For these reasons Roumania considers herself from this moment in a state of war with Austria-Hungary."

Roumania immediately after the declaration of war invaded Transylvania and met with some success. Germany and Bulgaria promptly attacked Roumania with results which are set forth in some detail in the general account of the war.

PORTUGAL IN THE WAR.

Thirty-six German and Austrian vessels lying in the Tagus river were seized by the Portuguese government Feb. 23, 1916, and on the following day eight more German steamers were seized at St. Vincent. Subsequently many others were taken in the same manner. It was officially announced that they had been requisitioned for transport and other service and not confiscated and that the action was prompted by the nation's economic situation. At 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of March 8 Germany declared war on Portugal. The declaration was handed to the Portuguese government by the German minister in Lisbon and was presented to the Portuguese minister in Berlin, who was handed his passports. Germany accused Portugal of committing many unneutral acts and pointed out that the seizure of German ships was contrary to the treaties existing between Portugal and Germany. Austria-Hungary declared war against Portugal March 15. In April the Portuguese government issued decrees expelling all Germans and allies of Germany from Portugal and sequestering their property.

Portuguese troops were called to the colors early in the spring, but so far as known they were not used on any of the European battle fronts. Those of them in East Africa assisted the allies in fighting the Germans there. Portugal, as a matter of fact, voted to join the entente in the war as early as November, 1914.

AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

The documents given herewith include the most important of the formal dispatches, letters and memorandums exchanged between the American state department and belligerent governments relating to neutral rights and duties. Most of them are to be found in the collection issued by the state department in August, 1916, designated as "European War No. 3," but several are of a later date. Many papers of less importance to the general public, such as those relating to British contraband lists, the case of the American steamship Joseph W. Fordney in the British prize court, the hovering of British warships near the territorial waters of the United States, the escape of officers and men from German ships interned in the United States, the status of American consular officers in belligerent territory occupied by enemy troops and the military service case of Frank Ghiloni, are omitted. All those, however, which have figured seriously in the international relations of the United States with Germany and Great Britain are given in full.

TORPEDOING OF THE SUSSEX.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, March 27, 1916.

Mr. Gerard is informed that considerable evidence has been received by the department to the effect that the steamship Sussex with several American citizens among the passengers was sunk by a submarine torpedo on the 24th instant, and he is directed to inquire immediately of the German foreign office whether a submarine belonging to Germany or her allies sank the Sussex. The department expects a prompt reply.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, March 28, 1916.

Mr. Gerard is informed of department's advice that the Englishman, a steamer of the Dominion line, was torpedoed March 2 after departure from Avonmouth for Portland, Me. The Englishman was a horse ship carrying several Americans on board and the survivors' list does not include some of them.

Mr. Gerard is asked to inquire immediately of the German authorities whether the submarine which sank the vessel belonged to Germany or her allies and to add that the United States government expects a prompt answer.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, March 29, 1916.

Mr. Lansing states that the department has been advised that on March 27 the ship Manchester Engineer with American citizens on board was torpedoed off Waterford without warning.

Mr. Gerard is directed to make inquiry of the German foreign minister as to whether a submarine of Germany or her allies sank the Manchester Engineer.

The department expects a prompt answer.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, April 1, 1916.

Mr. Lansing states that information has been received by the department that the Eagle Point, a British steamer with Americans aboard, was torpedoed on March 28, after surrender. The vessel was bound from St. John, New Brunswick, to Cherbourg, France, and those on board were left 130 miles south of Queenstown in two small boats, with a stormy wind blowing, in a heavy sea.

Mr. Gerard is directed to inquire immediately of the German government whether a submarine belonging to Germany or her allies torpedoed the Eagle Point. A prompt reply is expected by the department.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, April 1, 1916.

Mr. Lansing states that the department is in receipt of information that the Berwindvale, a British steamer with four Americans on board, was on March 16 torpedoed off Bantry, Ireland, without warning. Apparently the Berwindvale was coming to the United States for cargo.

Mr. Gerard is directed to inquire of the German government whether a submarine of Germany or her allies torpedoed the Berwindvale. The department expects a prompt reply.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Berlin, April 11, 1916.

Following note just received:

"Foreign Office, Berlin, April 10, 1916.

"The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the notes of the 29th and 30th ultimo and the 3d instant on the subject of the steamers Sussex, Manchester Engineer, Englishman, Berwindvale and Eagle Point, that the cases mentioned have been subjected to a careful investigation by the admiralty staff of the navy, in accordance with my notes of the 30th and 31st ultimo and the 4th and 5th instant, and that all this investigation has led to the following results:

"1. English steamer Berwindvale—A steamer, which was possibly the Berwindvale, was encountered by a German submarine on the evening of the 16th of March within sight of Bullock light on the English coast. As soon as the steamer noticed the submarine, which was traveling on the surface, she turned and ran away. She was called upon to stop by a shot of warning, but did not heed this warning, put out all her lights, and tried to escape. She was thereupon shelled until she stopped and lowered several boats without receiving further orders. After the crew had entered the boats and had sufficient time to pull off to a distance the ship was sunk.

"The name of this steamer has not been ascertained. Even with the help of the data furnished by the American embassy it is not possible to say with certainty that the incident described above relates to the steamer Berwindvale. But since the steamer sunk was a tank steamer, like the Berwindvale, it may be assumed that the vessels are identical; in this case, however, the statement of the embassy that the Berwindvale was torpedoed without warning would conflict with the facts.

"2. English steamer Englishman—On March 24 this steamer was ordered to stop by two shots of warning by a German submarine about twenty nautical miles west of Islay, but continued on her course without paying any attention to the warning and was therefore forced to stop by the submarine by means of artillery fire. After a long pursuit, she then lowered her boats without receiving further orders. After the German commander had convinced himself that the crew had entered the boats and pulled away from the vessel he sank the steamer.

"3. English steamer Manchester Engineer—It has not been possible to ascertain by the investigation conducted as yet whether the attack on this steamer, which took place off Waterford on March 27 according to the statements of the embassy, is traceable to a German submarine. The data furnished regarding the place and time of the incident do not afford a sufficient clue for the investigation. The receipt of more exact details concerning place, time and attendant circumstances of the attack reported to the American government would therefore be desired in order that the investigation may then be brought to a conclusion.

"4. English steamer Eagle Point—On the morning of March 28 this steamer was ordered to stop by a German submarine by signal and shot about 100, not 130, nautical miles from the southwest coast of Ireland, but she continued on her course. She was thereupon shelled until she stopped, and without receiving further orders lowered two boats which the crew entered. After the commander had convinced himself that the boats, which had hoisted sails, had gotten clear of the steamer he sank her.

"At the time of the sinking a north-northwest wind of the second strength was blowing, not a 'stormy wind' and there was a slight rise against the wind, not a 'heavy sea,' as asserted in the embassy's statement of the facts. The boats furthermore had every prospect of being picked up very soon, since the place of the sinking was on one of the much used steamer routes. If the crew of the steamer in rescuing themselves made use of only two small boats they are themselves to blame, for there were at least four large folding boats on the steamer, as the submarine was able to ascertain.

"5. French steamer Sussex.—The establishment of the fact whether the channel steamer Sussex was damaged by a German submarine or not has been made extraordinarily difficult because no exact data concerning place, time and attendant circumstances of the sinking were known and no picture of this vessel could be obtained until April 6. Consequently the investigation had to embrace every one of the undertakings which took place in the channel on or near the route between Folkestone and Dieppe on March 24, the day in question.

"In this locality a long black vessel without a flag, with a gray smokestack and a small gray superstructure, and with two tall masts, was encountered by a German submarine on March 24 about the middle of the English channel. The German commander gained the definite conviction that he had before him a war vessel, a mine layer of the newly constructed English Arabic class. He was led to this conviction, one, by the flush deck of the vessel; two, by the warship form of stern, protruding diagonally backward and then falling downward; three, by a warshiplike coat of paint; four, by the high speed of about eighteen sea miles developed by the vessel; five, by the circumstance that the vessel did not follow the course to the north of the lightbuys between Dungeness and Beachy Head, which is the customary course for merchant shipping according to the frequent and uniform observations of the German submarines, but sailed in the middle of the channel, pointing about for Havre. He consequently attacked the ship submerged at 3:55 o'clock p. m., central European time, one and one-half sea miles southeast of Bullock bank. The torpedo struck and caused such a severe explosion in the foreship that the whole foreship was torn loose up to the bridge. The particularly severe explosion permits the safe conclusion that there were large quantities of ammunition on board.

"The German commander has made a sketch of the vessel attacked by him, two reproductions of which are attached. The figure of the steamer Sussex, two copies of which are likewise attached, is a photograph taken from the English Daily Graphic paper of the 27th ultimo. A comparison of the sketch with the picture shows that the Sussex is not identical with the vessel attacked; the difference in the position of the smokestacks and the shape of the stern is particularly prominent. No further attack whatever was made by German submarines at the time coming into question for the Sussex on the way between Folkestone and Dieppe.

"From this the German government is forced to assume that the damaging of the Sussex is to be attributed to another cause than the attack of a German submarine. In order that the true state of affairs may be cleared up, the fact may possibly be of use that on the 1st and 2d of April alone no less than twenty-six English mines were exploded by German naval forces in the channel; the whole of that part of the seas is dangerous, owing to floating mines and torpedoes which have not sunk. The waters near the English coast will be still more dangerous on account of German mines also which have been sowed against the hostile naval forces.

"Should the American government have at its disposal further material for forming judgment on the case of the Sussex the German government begs to request that this material may be communicated to it in order that it may be able to subject this material to an examination also. In the event of differences of opinion arising between the two governments in this connection, the German government declares at this time its readiness to permit the facts to be ascertained by a mixed committee of investigation, pursuant to the third title of The Hague convention of Oct. 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

"The undersigned requests that the above be brought to the knowledge of the government of the United States and avails himself of this opportunity to renew, etc. VON JAGOW."

GERARD.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, April 13, 1916.
You are instructed to the secretary of foreign affairs a communication reading as follows:

I did not fail to transmit immediately, by telegraph, to my government your excellency's note of the 10th instant in regard to certain attacks by German submarines, and particularly in regard to the disastrous explosion which on March 24 last wrecked the French steamship Sussex in the English channel. I have now the honor to deliver, under instructions from my government, the following reply to your excellency:

Information now in the possession of the government of the United States fully establishes the facts in the case of the Sussex, and the inferences which my government has drawn from that information it regards as confirmed by the circumstances set forth in your excellency's note of the 10th instant. On the 24th of March, 1916, at about 2:50 o'clock in the afternoon, the unarmed steamer Sussex, with 325 or more passengers on board, among whom were a number of American citizens, was torpedoed while crossing from Folkestone to Dieppe. The Sussex had never been armed; was a vessel known to be habitually used only for the conveyance of passengers across the English channel; and was following the route taken by her ships or supply ships. About eighty of her passengers, noncombatants of all ages and sexes, including citizens of the United States, were killed or injured.

A careful, detailed and scrupulously impartial investigation by naval and military officers of the United States has conclusively established the fact that the Sussex was torpedoed without warning or summons to surrender and that the torpedo by which she was struck was of German manufacture. In the view of the government of the United States these facts, from the first made the conclusion that the torpedo was fired by a German submarine unavoidable. It now considers that conclusion substantiated by the statements of your excellency's note. A full statement of the facts upon which the government of the United States has based its conclusion is inclosed.

The government of the United States, after having given careful consideration to the note of the imperial government of the 10th of April, regrets to state that the impression made upon it by the statements and proposals contained in that note is that the imperial government has failed to appreciate the gravity of the situation which has resulted not alone from the attack on the Sussex but from the whole method and character of submarine warfare as disclosed by the unrestrained practice of the commanders of German undersea craft during the past twelve months and more in the indiscriminate destruction of merchant vessels of all sorts, nationalities and destinations. If the sinking of the Sussex had been an isolated case the government of the United States might find it possible to hope that the officer who was responsible for that act had willfully violated his orders or had been criminally negligent in taking none of the precautions they prescribed, and that the ends of justice might be satisfied by imposing upon him an adequate punishment, coupled with a formal disavowal of the act and payment of a suitable indemnity by the imperial government. But, though the attack upon the Sussex was manifestly indefensible and caused a loss of life so tragical as to make it stand forth as one of the most terrible examples of the inhumanity of submarine warfare as the commanders of German vessels are conducting it, it unhappily does not stand alone.

On the contrary, the government of the United States is forced by recent events to conclude that it is only 'one instance, even though one of the most extreme and most distressing instances, of the deliberate method and spirit of indiscriminate destruction of merchant vessels of all sorts, nationalities and destinations which have become more and more unmistakable as the activity of German undersea vessels of war has in recent months been quickened and extended.

The imperial government will recall that when, in February, 1915, it announced its intention of treating the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as embraced within the seat of war and of destroying all merchant ships owned by its enemies that might be found within that zone of danger, and warned all vessels, neutral as well as belligerent, to keep out of the waters thus proscribed or to enter them at their peril, the government of the United States earnestly protested. It took the position that such a policy could not be pursued without constant gross and palpable violations of the accepted law of nations, particularly if submarine craft were to be employed as its instruments. Inasmuch as the rules prescribed by that law, rules founded on the principles of humanity and established for the protection of the lives of non-combatants at sea, could not in the nature of the case be observed by such vessels. It based its protest on the ground that persons of neutral nationality and vessels of neutral ownership would be exposed to extreme and intolerable risks; and that no right to close any part of the high seas could lawfully be asserted by the imperial government in the circumstances then existing. The law of nations in these matters, upon which the government of the United States based that protest, is not of recent origin, nor founded upon merely arbitrary principles set up by convention. It is based, on the contrary, upon manifest principles of humanity and has long been established with the approval and by the express assent of all civilized nations.

The imperial government, notwithstanding, persisted in carrying out the policy announced, expressing the hope that the dangers involved, at any rate to neutral vessels, would be reduced to a minimum by the instructions which it had issued to the commanders of its submarines, and assuring the government of the United States that it would take every possible precaution both to respect the rights of neutrals and to safeguard the lives of non-combatants.

In pursuance of this policy of submarine warfare against the commerce of its adversaries, thus announced and thus entered upon despite the solemn protest of the government of the United States, the commanders of the imperial government's undersea vessels have carried on practices of such ruthless destruction which have made it more and more evident as the months have gone by that the imperial government has found it impracticable to put any such restraints upon them as it had stated and promised to put. Again and again the imperial government has given its solemn assurances to the government of the United States that at least passenger ships would not be thus dealt with, and yet it has repeatedly permitted its undersea commanders to disregard those assurances with entire impunity. As recently as February last it gave notice that it would regard all armed merchantmen owned by its enemies as part of the armed naval forces of its adversaries and deal with them as with men-of-war, thus, at least by implication, pledging itself to give warning to vessels which were not armed and to accord security of life to their passengers and crews; but even this limitation their submarine commanders have recklessly ignored.

Vessels of neutral ownership, even vessels of neutral port, have been destroyed along with vessels of belligerent ownership in constantly increasing numbers. Sometimes the merchantmen attacked have been warned and summoned to surrender before being fired on or torpedoed; sometimes their passengers and crews have been vouchsafed the poor security of being allowed to take to the ship's boats before the ship was sent to the bottom. But again and again no warning has been given, no escape even to the ship's boats allowed to those on board. Great liners like the Lusitania and Arabic and mere passenger boats like the Sussex have been attacked without a moment's warning, often before they have even become aware that they were in the presence of an armed ship of the enemy, and the lives of non-combatants, passengers and crew, have been destroyed wholesale and in a manner which the government of the United States cannot but regard as wanton and without the slightest color of justification. No limit of any kind has in fact been set to their indiscriminate pursuit and destruction of merchantmen of all kinds and nationalities within the waters which the imperial government has chosen to designate as lying within the seat of war. The roll of Americans who have lost their lives upon ships thus attacked and destroyed has grown month by month until the ominous toll has mounted into the hundreds.

The government of the United States has been very patient. At every stage of this distressing experience of tragedy after tragedy it has sought to be governed by the most thoughtful consideration of the extraordinary circumstances of an unprecedented war and to be guided by sentiments of very genuine friendship for the people and government of Germany. It has accepted the successive explanations and assurances of the imperial government as of course given in entire sincerity and good faith, and has hoped, even against hope, that it would prove to be possible for the imperial government so to order and control the acts of its naval commanders as to square its policy with the recognized principles of humanity as embodied in the law of nations. It has made every allowance for unprecedented conditions and has been willing to wait until the facts became unmistakable and were susceptible of only one interpretation.

It now owes it to a just regard for its own rights to say to the imperial government that that time has come. It has become painfully evident to it that the position which it took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce, is, of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment of course involves, utterly incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of non-combatants.

If it is still the purpose of the imperial government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the imperial government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German empire altogether. This action the government of the United States contemplates with the greatest reluctance but feels constrained to take in behalf of humanity and the rights of neutral nations.

STATEMENT OF FACTS IN SUSSEX CASE.
Accompanying Note to German Government of April 13, 1916.

[Statements and affidavits referred to in the memorandum are not printed, as they are of great length and are summarized as to vital points by the American secretary of state.—Ed.]

The French channel steamer Sussex, employed regularly in passenger service between the ports of Folkestone, England, and Dieppe, France, as it had been for years (statement of the French ministry of foreign affairs), left Folkestone for Dieppe at 1:25 p. m., March 24, 1916, with 325 or more passengers and a crew of fifty-three men. (Declaration of Capt. Mouffet; report of Rear-Admiral Grasset.) The passengers, among whom were about twenty-five American citizens (telegram London embassy, March 25, and Paris embassy, March 26 and 28), were of several nationalities and many of them were women and children and nearly half of them subjects of neutral states. (Report of Commander Sayles and Lieut. Smith; Rear-Admiral Grasset's report.) The Sussex carried no armament (statement of French ministry of foreign affairs; report of Commander Sayles and Lieut. Smith, affidavits of American passengers), has never been employed as a troop ship, and was following a route not used for transporting troops from Great Britain to France. (British admiralty statement; statement of French ministry of foreign affairs.)

The steamer proceeded on its course almost due south after passing Dungeness. (Declaration of Capt. Mouffet.) The weather was clear and the sea smooth. (Affidavits of Edna Hale, John H. Hearley, Gertrude W. Warren.) At 2:50 p. m., when the Sussex was about thirteen miles from Dungeness (declaration of Capt. Mouffet), the captain of the vessel, who was on the bridge, saw about 150 meters from the ship, on the port side, the wake of a torpedo. (Declaration of Capt. Mouffet.) It was also seen very clearly by the first officer and the boat-swain, who were with the captain on the bridge. (Report of Rear-Admiral Grasset.) Immediately the captain gave orders to port the helm and stop the starboard engine (declaration of Capt. Mouffet), the purpose being to swing the vessel to starboard so as to dodge the torpedo by allowing it to pass along the port bow on a line converging with the altered course of the steamer. Before, however, the vessel could be turned far enough to avoid crossing the course of the torpedo, the latter struck the hull at an angle a short distance forward of the bridge, exploded, destroyed the entire forward part of the steamer as far back as the first water-tight bulkhead, carried away the foremast with the wireless antennae and killed or injured about eighty of the persons on board. (Declaration of Capt. Mouffet; report of Rear-Admiral Grasset; deposition of Henry S. Beer.) At the time no other vessel was in sight. (Affidavits of Samuel F. Bemis, T. W. Culbertson, John H. Hearley and others.)

The approach of the torpedo was witnessed by several other persons on the vessel. (Affidavits of Samuel F. Bemis, Henry S. Beer, Gertrude W. Warren.) One of these, an American citizen named Henry S. Beer, was leaning on the port rail about ten feet behind the bridge and gazing seaward when he saw the approaching torpedo about 100 yards away and exclaimed to his wife and companion: "A torpedo!" Immediately following his exclamation the missile struck the vessel. (Depositions of Henry S. Beer and Mrs. Henry S. Beer.)

In further corroboration of the fact, that the captain saw the torpedo coming toward the vessel, is the sworn statement of the engineers on duty that the order to port the helm and to stop the starboard engine was received and obeyed. (Report of Admiral Grasset.) No reasonable explanation can be given for this unusual order other than that the captain saw something which caused him to change his course sharply to starboard.

In addition to this evidence, which would in itself appear to be conclusive that the agent of destruction was a torpedo, is that of Lieut. Smith, United States navy, attached to the American embassy at Paris, who, accompanied by Maj. Logan, United States army, of the embassy, went to Boulogne, inspected the hull of the Sussex and personally found beneath the mass of water-soaked debris of the wreck fifteen pieces of metal, which they retained in their possession as they did not believe the pieces formed part of the vessel. The inspection of the hull disclosed that the vessel was wrecked by an external explosion, the boilers being intact, and that a short distance forward of the bridge was a large dent showing that the vessel had received a heavy blow, the direction of impact being from abaft the beam along a line at an acute angle with the keel of the vessel. (Report of Lieut. Smith, cabled April 1.) This evidence coincides with and corroborates the statement that the vessel was swinging to starboard and away from the torpedo when struck.

The pieces of metal which the American officers had collected were compared by Lieut. Smith, Lieutenant-Commander Sayles and Maj. Logan with mines and plans of mines in possession of the French naval authorities at Boulogne, Rochefort and Toulon, and British naval authorities at Portsmouth. These officers are positive in their opinion that these pieces of metal were not parts of a mine. (Report of Lieut. Smith, cabled April 2 and 5.)

Among these fifteen pieces of metal were two screw-bolts showing the effects of an explosion, which were stamped with "K" and "56" on faces of the head of one, and "K" and "58" on faces of the head of the other. On examining German torpedoes in the possession of the French naval authorities at Toulon, and of the English naval authorities at Portsmouth, the American officers found that identical screws with the letter "K" and a number were employed to fasten the "war" head (kopf) to the air chamber. (Lieut. Smith's reports, cabled April 2, 5 and 13.)

The screws used in French and English torpedoes have no markings and are of a slightly different size. (Same reports.) Furthermore, the American officers were able by comparison and close examination to positively identify and locate all the remaining thirteen pieces of metal as parts of a German torpedo, as follows:

Fragment 3, part of inner seat of water relief valve of engine valve

Fragments 4 and 5, panto bands of engine room casing.

Fragments 6 to 10 inclusive and 12, parts of engine cylinders.

Fragments 11, 13, 14, 15, parts of steel war head still bearing the distinctive red paint common to German torpedo war heads. (Report of Lieut. Smith, cabled April 5.)

In view of these authenticated facts there can be no reasonable doubt that the Sussex was torpedoed and that the torpedo was of German manufacture. As no vessel was seen by any person on the Sussex, the conclusion is irresistible that the torpedo was launched without warning from a submarine which was submerged at the time of the attack and remained beneath the surface after the explosion.

The conclusion thus reached from the evidence (the affidavits being those of American citizens) collected by the department of state is substantiated by the statements in the imperial government's note of April 10, 1916. According to those statements—

(a) A German submarine torpedoed a steamer one and one-half miles southeast of Bull Rock bank.

Department's comment—The point of attack is exactly in the course which was taken by the Sussex after passing Dungeness and about one-half mile from the place where the captain of the Sussex states he was torpedoed.

(b) The attack took place at 3:55 o'clock p. m., central European time.

Department's comment—3:55 p. m., central European time, would correspond to 2:55 p. m., western European time. The time of the striking of the torpedo according to the captain of the Sussex, and the stopping of the clocks on board the vessel, was 2:50 p. m., western time.

(c) The torpedo, when it struck, caused an explosion which tore away the whole foreship up to the bridge.

Department's comment—The forepart of the Sussex was wrecked as far back as the first water-tight bulkhead, according to the official reports.

(d) The German submarine was submerged when the torpedo was launched and there is no statement that it came to the surface after the attack.

Department's comment—The conclusion was reached that the submarine was submerged from the fact that no one on the Sussex saw a submarine though the weather was fine.

(e) No warning was given and no attempt was made to give one, since it is not mentioned.

Department's comment—The evidence collected shows affirmatively no warning was given.

(f) A sketch by the submarine commander of the steamer which he torpedoed does not agree with a photograph of the Sussex in the London Graphic.

Department's comment—This sketch was apparently made from memory of an observation of the vessel through a periscope. As the only differences noted by the commander, who relied on his memory, were the position of the smokestack and the shape of the stern, it is to be presumed the vessels were similar in other respects.

(g) No other German submarines on that day attacked steamers in that locality.

Department's comment—As no vessel is reported to have been torpedoed without warning by a submerged submarine other than the Sussex, it is beyond question that that vessel was torpedoed by the submarine whose commander's report is relied upon in the note of April 10.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Berlin, May 4, 1916.

Following is the text of the note handed to me both in German and English at 5:30 this afternoon by secretary of state for foreign affairs:

"Foreign Office, Berlin, May 4, 1916.

"The undersigned, on behalf of the imperial government, has the honor to present to his excellency the ambassador of the United States, Mr. James W. Gerard, the following reply to the note of April 20 regarding the conduct of German submarine warfare:

"The German government has handed over to the proper naval authorities for further investigation the evidence concerning the Sussex, as communicated by the government of the United States. Judging by results that this investigation has hitherto yielded, the German government is alive to the possibility that the ship mentioned in the note of April 10 as torpedoed by a German submarine is actually identical with the Sussex. The German government begs to reserve further communications on the matter until certain points are ascertained which are of decisive importance for establishing the facts of the case. Should it turn out that the commander was wrong in assuming the vessel to be a man-of-war the German government will not fail to draw the consequences resulting therefrom.

"In connection with the case of the Sussex, the government of the United States has made a series of statements, the gist of which is the assertion that this incident is to be considered as one instance of the deliberate method of indiscriminate destruction of vessels of all sorts, nationalities and destinations by German submarine commanders. The German government must emphatically repudiate this assertion. The German government, however, thinks it of little avail to enter into details in the present stage of affairs, more particularly as the government of the United States has omitted to substantiate this assertion by reference to concrete facts. The German government will only state that it has imposed far-reaching restraints upon the use of the submarine weapon solely in consideration of the interests of neutrals, in spite of the fact that these restrictions are necessarily of advantage to Germany's enemies; no such consideration has ever been shown to the neutrals by Great Britain and her allies.

"The German submarine forces have had, in fact, orders to conduct submarine warfare in accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels as recognized by international law, the sole exception being the conduct of warfare against the enemy trade carried on enemy freight ships that are encountered in the war zone surrounding Great Britain; with regard to these no assurances have ever been given to the government of the United States; no such assurance was contained in the declaration of Feb. 8, 1916. The German government cannot admit any doubt that these orders have been given and are executed in good faith. Errors have actually occurred; they can in no kind of warfare be avoided altogether, and allowances must be made in the conduct of naval warfare against an enemy resorting to all kinds of ruses, whether permissible or illicit. But, apart from the possibility of errors, naval warfare, just like warfare on land, implies unavoidable dangers for neutral persons and goods entering the fighting zone. Even in cases where naval action was confined to the ordinary forms of cruiser warfare, neutral persons and goods have repeatedly come to grief. The German government has repeatedly and explicitly pointed out the dangers from mines that have led to the loss of numerous ships. The German government has made several proposals to the government of the United States in order to reduce to a minimum for American travelers and goods the inherent dangers of naval warfare. Unfortunately the government of the United States has decided not to accept these proposals; had it accepted, the government of the United States would have been instrumental in preventing the greater part of the accidents that American citizens have met with in the meantime. The German government still stands by its offer to come to an agreement along these lines.

"As the German government has repeatedly declared, it cannot dispense with the use of the submarine weapon in the conduct of warfare against enemy trade. The German government, however, has now decided to make a further concession in adapting the methods of submarine warfare to the interests of the neutrals; in reaching this decision the German government has been actuated by considerations which are above the level of the disputed question.

"The German government attaches no less importance to the sacred principles of humanity than the government of the United States. Again, it fully takes into account that both governments have for many years co-operated in developing international law in conformity with these principles, the ultimate object of which has been always to confine warfare on sea and on land to the armed forces of the belligerents and to safeguard, as far as possible, noncombatants against the horrors of war.

"But, although those considerations are of great weight, they alone would not, under the present circumstances, have determined the attitude of the German government.

"For, in answer to the appeal made by the United States government on behalf of the sacred principles of humanity and international law, the German government must repeat once more with all emphasis that it was not the German but the British government which, ignoring all the accepted rules of international law, has extended this terrible war to the lives and property of noncombatants, having no regard whatever for the interests and rights of the neutrals and noncombatants that through this method of warfare have been severely injured.

"In self-defense against the illegal conduct of British warfare, while fighting a bitter struggle for her national existence, Germany had to resort to the hard but effective weapon of submarine warfare. As matters stand, the German government cannot but reiterate its regret that the sentiments of humanity which the government of the United States extends with such fervor to the unhappy victims of submarine warfare are not extended with the same warmth of feeling to the many millions of women and children who, according to the avowed intentions of the British government, shall be starved and who, by their sufferings, shall force the victorious armies of the central powers into ignominious capitulation. The German government, in agreement with the German people, fails to understand this discrimination, all the more as it has repeatedly and explicitly declared itself ready to use the submarine weapon in strict conformity with the rules of international law as recognized before the outbreak of the war, if Great Britain were likewise ready to adapt her conduct of warfare to these rules. The several attempts made by the government of the United States to prevail upon the British government to act accordingly have failed because of the flat refusal on the part of the British government. Moreover, Great Britain has ever since again and again violated international law, surpassing all bounds in outraging neutral rights. The latest measure adopted by Great Britain, declaring German bunker coal as contraband and establishing conditions under which alone English bunker coal shall be supplied to neutrals, is nothing but an unheard of attempt, by way of exaction, to force neutral tonnage into the service of the British trade war.

"The German people knows that the government of the United States has the power to confine this war to the armed forces of the belligerent countries in the interest of humanity and the maintenance of international law. The government of the United States would have been certain of attaining this end had it been determined to insist against Great Britain on its incontestable rights to the freedom of the seas. But, as matters stand, the German people is under the impression that the government of the United States, while demanding that Germany, struggling for her existence, shall restrain the use of an effective weapon, and while making the compliance with these demands a condition for the maintenance of relations with Germany, confines itself to protests against the illegal methods adopted by Germany's enemies. Moreover, the German people knows to what a considerable extent its enemies are supplied with all kinds of war material from the United States.

"It will therefore be understood that the appeal made by the government of the United States to the sentiments of humanity and to the principles of international law cannot, under the circumstances, meet with the same hearty response from the German people which such an appeal is otherwise always certain to find here. In the German government, nevertheless, has resolved to go to the utmost limit of concessions, it has not alone been guided by the friendship connecting the two great nations for over a hundred years, but it also has thought of the great doom which threatens the entire civilized world should this cruel and sanguinary war be extended and prolonged.

"The German government, conscious of Germany's strength, has twice within the last few months announced before the world its readiness to make peace on a basis safeguarding Germany's vital interests, thus indicating that it is not Germany's fault if peace is still withheld from the nations of Europe.

"The German government feels all the more justified to declare that the responsibility could not be borne before the forum of mankind and history if, after twenty-one months' duration of the war, the submarine question under discussion between the German government and the government of the United States were to take a turn seriously threatening the maintenance of peace between the two nations.

"As far as it lies with the German government, it wishes to prevent things from taking such a course. The German government, moreover, is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German government believes itself, now as before, to be in agreement with the government of the United States.

The German government, guided by this idea, notifies the government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"But neutrals cannot expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interest, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality, and the German government is convinced that the government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it is violated.

"Accordingly, the German government is confident that, in consequence of the new orders issued to its naval forces, the government of the United States will now also consider all impediments removed which may have been in the way of a mutual co-operation toward the restoration of the freedom of the seas during the war as suggested in the note of July 23, 1915, and it does not doubt that the government of the United States will now demand and insist that the British government shall forthwith observe the rules of international law universally recognized before the war as they are laid down in the notes presented by the government of the United States to the British government on Dec. 23, 1914, and Nov. 5, 1915. Should the steps taken by the government of the United States not attain the object it desires, to have the laws of humanity followed by all belligerent nations, the German government would then be facing a new situation, in which it must reserve itself complete liberty of decision.

"The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the American ambassador the assurances of his highest consideration.

"VON JAGOW."

Foreign office informs me note will be given out here to the German newspapers and American correspondents late to-morrow afternoon.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, May 8, 1916.

You are instructed to deliver to the minister of foreign affairs a communication textually as follows:

"The note of the imperial German government under date of May 4, 1916, has received careful consideration by the government of the United States. It is especially noted, as indicating the purpose of the imperial government as to the future, that it 'is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of the war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents,' and that it is determined to impose upon all its commanders at sea the limitations of the recognized rules of international law upon which the government of the United States has insisted. Throughout the months which have elapsed since the imperial government announced, on Feb. 4, 1915, its submarine policy, now happily abandoned, the government of the United States has been constantly guided and restrained by motives of friendship in its patient efforts to bring to an amicable settlement the critical questions arising from that policy. Accepting the imperial government's declaration of its abandonment of the policy which has so seriously menaced the good relations between the two countries, the government of the United States will rely upon a scrupulous execution henceforth of the now altered policy of the imperial government, such as will remove the principal danger to an interruption of the good relations existing between the United States and Germany.

"The government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the imperial German government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the government of the United States and any other belligerent government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the imperial government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the government of the United States notifies the imperial government that it cannot for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of neutralization of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative."

SUBMARINES AND ARMED MERCHANTMEN

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Telegram-Paraphrase.)

American Embassy, Berlin, May 9, 1915.

Ambassador Gerard transmits to the department the following statement, which he says was received at 5:30 to-day from the German foreign office, relative to attacks made by mistake on neutral vessels of commerce by German submarines:

"1. Imperial German government has naturally no intention of causing to be attacked by submarines or aircraft such neutral ships of commerce in the zone of naval warfare, more definitely described in the notice of the German admiralty staff of Feb. 4 last, as have been guilty of no hostile act; on the contrary, the most definite instructions have repeatedly been issued to German war vessels to avoid attacks on such ships under all circumstances. Even when such ships have contraband of war on board they are dealt with by submarines solely according to the rules of international law applying to prize warfare.

"2. Should a neutral ship, nevertheless, come to harm through German submarines or aircraft on account of an unfortunate [apparent omission] in the above mentioned zone of naval warfare, the German government will unreservedly recognize its responsibility therefor. In such a case it will express its regrets and afford damages without first instituting a prize court action.

"3. It is the custom of the German government as soon as the sinking of a neutral ship in the above-mentioned zone of naval warfare is ascribed to German war vessels to institute an immediate investigation into the cause. If grounds appear thereby to be given for assuming such a hypothesis, the German navy places itself in communication with the interested neutral government, so that the latter may also institute an investigation. If the German government is thereby convinced that the ship has been destroyed by German war vessels, it will not delay in carrying out the provisions of paragraph 2 above. In case the German government, contrary to the viewpoint of the neutral government, is not convinced by the result of the investigation, the German government has already on several occasions declared itself ready to allow the question to be decided by an international investigation commission according to chapter three of the Hague convention of Oct. 18, 1907, for the peaceful solution of international disputes."

GERARD.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

German Embassy, Washington, Sept. 1, 1915.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: With reference to our conversation this morning I beg to inform you that my instructions, concerning our answer to your last Lusitania note contain the following passage:

"Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance."

Although I know that you do not wish to discuss the Lusitania question till the Arabic incident has been definitely and satisfactorily settled, I desire to inform you of the above because this policy of my government was decided on before the Arabic incident occurred.

I have no objection to your making any use you may please of the above information.

I remain, etc.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Translation.)

German Embassy, Cedarhurst, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1915.

Mr. Secretary of State: On the 25th of last month an English merchant vessel fired on a German submarine in the Irish sea without any challenge of any kind.

On the 18th of the same month a German submarine was fired on in Bristol channel by an English passenger steamer that had been summoned to stop.

By direction of my government I have the honor to bring those cases to your excellency's notice in order again to lay stress on the point that British merchant vessels which attack German submarines of course expose themselves to the danger of destruction; American citizens who travel on such vessels do so on their own responsibility and incur the greatest risk.

Accept, etc.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, Berlin, Sept. 11, 1915.

Sir: With reference to my telegram of the 10th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy and translation of the note received from the imperial foreign office dated Sept. 9, 1915, inclosing the report of the attack on the steamer Orduña by a German submarine.

I have, etc.

JAMES W. GERARD.

GERMAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO

AMBASSADOR GERARD.

(Inclosure-Translation.)

Foreign Office, Berlin, Sept. 9, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to transmit herewith to his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the notes of July 27 and Sept. 1, 1915, a memorandum relative to the attack by a German submarine on the English passenger steamer Orduña.

The undersigned avails himself, etc.,

VON JAGOW.

(Subinclosure-Translation.)

Memorandum.

At about quarter past 7 on the morning of July 9 last a German submarine sighted a steamer from three to five miles away and a sailing vessel about a mile away. The steamer was proceeding without any flag or neutral markings and was taken for a small enemy steamer by the commander of the submarine on account of the difficulty of observation caused by the unfavorable weather. The commander decided first to attack the steamer submerged and fired a torpedo at the vessel which missed its mark.

Hoping to catch the steamer above the water, the submarine rose and chased the steamer on the surface. The steamer did not stop when a shot of warning was fired, and therefore several shells were fired at her which did not strike her, as the submarine was pitching about and the distance was great. The submarine then proceeded to the sailing vessel, which was shown to be the American bark Normandie, bound from New York to Liverpool with a cargo of lumber.

Although the cargo contained contraband, the sailing vessel was permitted to continue her voyage unhindered, as it was impossible to guarantee that the crew would be surely rescued in the small boats if the ship were sunk.

The first attack on the Orduna by a torpedo was not in accordance with the existing instructions, which provide that large passenger steamers are only to be torpedoed after previous warning and after the rescuing of passengers and crew. The failure to observe the instructions was based on an error, which is at any rate comprehensible, and the repetition of which appears to be out of the question in view of the more explicit instructions issued in the meantime. Moreover, the commanders of the submarines have been reminded that it is their duty to exercise greater care and to observe carefully the orders issued.

Berlin, Sept. 9, 1915.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE GERMAN EMBASSY.

German Embassy, Washington, Jan. 7, 1916.

1. German submarines in the Mediterranean had, from the beginning, orders to conduct cruiser warfare against enemy merchant vessels only in accordance with general principles of international law, and in particular measures of reprisal as applied in the war zone around the British Isles were to be excluded.

2. German submarines are therefore permitted to destroy enemy merchant vessels in the Mediterranean, i. e., passenger as well as freight ships, as far as they do not try to escape or offer resistance, only after passengers and crew have been accorded safety.

3. All cases of destruction of enemy merchant ships in the Mediterranean in which German submarines are concerned are made the subject of official investigation, and, besides, submitted to regular prize court proceedings. In so far as American interests are concerned, the German government will communicate the result to the American government. Thus also in the Persia case if the circumstances should call for it.

4. If commanders of German submarines should not have obeyed the orders given to them they will be punished; furthermore, the German government will make reparation for damage caused by death of or injuries to American citizens.

INFORMAL AND CONFIDENTIAL LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR.

Department of State, Washington, Jan. 18, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Ambassador: It is a matter of the deepest interest to my government to bring to an end, if possible, the dangers to life which attend the use of submarines as at present employed in destroying enemy commerce on the high seas, since on any merchant vessel of belligerent nationality there may be citizens of the United States who have taken passage or are members of the crew, in the exercise of their recognized rights as neutrals. I assume that your excellency's government are equally solicitous to protect their nationals from the exceptional hazards which are presented by their passage on a merchant vessel through those portions of the high seas in which undersea craft of their enemy are operating.

While I am fully alive to the appalling loss of life among noncombatants, regardless of age or sex, which has resulted from the present method of destroying merchant vessels without removing the persons on board to places of safety, and while I view that practice as contrary to those humane principles which should control belligerents in the conduct of their naval operations, I do not feel that a belligerent should be deprived of the proper use of submarines in the interruption of enemy commerce since those instruments of war have proven their effectiveness in this particular branch of warfare on the high seas.

In order to bring submarine warfare within the general rules of international law and the principles of humanity without destroying its efficiency in the destruction of commerce, I believe that a formula may be found which, though it may require slight modifications of the practice generally followed by nations prior to the employment of submarines, will appeal to the sense of justice and fairness of all the belligerents in the present war.

Your excellency will understand that in seeking a formula or rule of this nature I approach it of necessity from the point of view of a neutral, but I believe that it will be equally efficacious in preserving the lives of all noncombatants on merchant vessels of belligerent nationality.

My comments on this subject are predicated on the following propositions:

1. A noncombatant has a right to traverse the high seas in a merchant vessel entitled to fly a belligerent flag and to rely upon the observance of the rules of international law and principles of humanity if the vessel is approached by a naval vessel of another belligerent.

2. A merchant vessel of enemy nationality should not be attacked without being ordered to stop.

3. An enemy merchant vessel, when ordered to do so by a belligerent submarine, should immediately stop.

4. Such vessel should not be attacked after being ordered to stop unless it attempts to flee or to resist, and in case it ceases to flee or resist the attack should discontinue.

5. In the event that it is impossible to place a prize crew on board of an enemy merchant vessel or convey it into port, the vessel may be sunk, provided the crew and passengers have been removed to a place of safety.

In complying with the foregoing propositions, which, in my opinion, embody the principal rules the strict observance of which will insure the life of a noncombatant on a merchant vessel which is intercepted by a submarine, I am not unmindful of the obstacles which would be met by undersea craft as commerce destroyers.

Prior to the year 1915 belligerent operations against enemy commerce on the high seas had been conducted with cruisers carrying heavy armaments. Under these conditions international law appeared to permit a merchant vessel to carry an armament for defensive purposes without losing its character as a private commercial vessel. This right seems to have been predicated on the superior defensive strength of ships of war, and the limitation of armament to have been dependent on the fact that it could not be used effectively in offense against enemy naval vessels, while it could defend the merchantmen against the generally inferior armament of piratical ships and privateers.

The use of the submarine, however, has changed these relations. Comparison of the defensive strength of a cruiser and a submarine shows that the latter, relying for protection on its power to submerge, is almost defenseless in point of construction. Even a merchant ship carrying a small caliber gun would be able to use it effectively for offense against a submarine. Moreover, pirates and sea rovers have been swept from the main trade channels of the seas, and privateering has been abolished. Consequently, the placing of guns on merchantmen, at the present day of submarine warfare, can be explained only on the ground of a purpose to hinder merchantmen superior in force to submarines and to prevent warning and visit and search by them. Any armament, therefore, on a merchant vessel would seem to have the character of an offensive armament.

If a submarine is required to stop and search a merchant vessel on the high seas and, in case it is found that she is of enemy character and that conditions necessitate her destruction, to remove to a place of safety all persons on board, it would not seem just or reasonable that the submarine should be compelled, while complying with these requirements, to expose itself to almost certain destruction by the guns on board the merchant vessel.

It would therefore appear to be a reasonable and reciprocally just arrangement if it could be agreed by the opposing belligerents that submarines should be caused to adhere strictly to the rules of international law in the matter of stopping and searching merchant vessels, determining their belligerent nationality, and removing the crews and passengers to places of safety before sinking the vessels as prizes of war, and that merchant vessels of belligerent nationality should be prohibited and prevented from carrying any armament whatsoever.

In presenting this formula as a basis for conditional declarations by the belligerent governments, I do so in the full conviction that your government will consider primarily the humane purpose of saving the lives of innocent people rather than the insistence upon a doubtful legal right which may be denied on account of new conditions.

I would be pleased if you would be good enough to bring this suggestion to the attention of your government and inform me of their views upon the subject, and whether they would be willing to make such a declaration conditioned upon their enemies' making a similar declaration.

A communication similar to this one has been addressed to the ambassadors of France, Russia and Italy and the minister of Belgium at this capital.

I should add that my government is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel carrying an armament of any sort, in view of the character of submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of undersea craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated by a neutral as well as by a belligerent government, and is seriously considering instructing its officials accordingly.

I am, etc., ROBERT LANSING.

AMBASSADOR PENFIELD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Extract.)

American Embassy, Vienna, Feb. 12, 1916.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith inclosed a copy, with translation, of a circular note verbale, dated the 10th instant, from the Austro-Hungarian ministry of foreign affairs, as communicated in my telegram of that date, announcing that orders had been issued to the Austro-Hungarian naval forces to treat all merchant vessels armed with cannon as vessels of war.

This announcement, which was made simultaneously with a similar one by the German government, has been received with general approval by the entire newspaper press in the monarchy.

I have, etc., FREDERICK C. PENFIELD.

(Inclosure—Translation.)

Imperial and Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Vienna, Feb. 10, 1916.

Circular Note Verbale.

The governments of the neutral powers are aware that in the course of the year 1913 the British admiralty caused a number of large English merchant vessels to be armed. As was announced on the 26th of March, 1913, in the house of commons by the first lord of the admiralty, the armament of the said steamers was to protect them against the dangers from enemy vessels transformed into auxiliary cruisers and at the same time to serve only for defense.

The experiences gained during the course of the present war show that a considerable number of British merchant steamers have made use of guns placed on board them against hostile war vessels, and that not only with the intention of resisting the legitimate exercise of the right of capture but also of attacking and destroying hostile war vessels.

As appears from a memorandum transmitted by the imperial German government to the neutral powers under to-day's date, instructions have been found on board English steamers proving that the royal British government themselves have incited their merchant vessels to these illegal acts, and that in direct contradiction of the assurances given to the department of state at Washington.

The example of Great Britain has been followed during the course of the hostilities by her allies, especially by France and by Italy.

Without desiring to enter into an investigation of the strange claim put forward by the royal British government, according to which the merchant vessels, armed by the said government, preserved their inoffensive character, whereas a merchant vessel armed by an enemy is to be considered by the English naval forces as an auxiliary cruiser, the imperial and royal government limit themselves to stating that all merchant ships armed with cannon, for whatever purpose, by this very fact lose the character of peaceable vessels.

Under these conditions orders have been given to the Austro-Hungarian naval forces to treat such ships as belligerent vessels, an order which, however, will not be put into execution until the 29th of February, 1916.

This delay is granted in the interest of the neutral powers, to the end that they may preserve their nationals from the danger to which they expose themselves by intrusting their persons and goods to armed merchant vessels of the states at war with Austria-Hungary and may also warn those of their nationals who find themselves already on board the vessels of the category indicated.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, Berlin, Feb. 14, 1916.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith three copies of the memorandum of the imperial German government of the treatment of armed merchantmen, dated Feb. 8, 1916, which formed the subject of my telegrams of the 9th and 10th instant. There are likewise inclosed a translation of the text of the memorandum and a copy and translation of the note verbale from the imperial foreign office, dated Feb. 10, 1916, with which the memorandum was transmitted to me.

I have, etc., JAMES W. GERARD.

(Inclosure 1—Translation.)

Foreign Office, Berlin, Feb. 10, 1916.

Note Verbale.

The foreign office has the honor to transmit herewith to the embassy of the United States of America three copies of a memorandum of the imperial German government on the treatment of armed merchantmen, with inclosures, and to request that the embassy be good enough to bring the essential contents of the memorandum to the knowledge of its government by telegram, informing it at the time that the order to the German naval forces mentioned in Section IV., No. 1, of the memorandum will not be carried into effect until the 29th instant, in the interests of neutrals already on board armed merchant vessels.

(Inclosure 2—Translation.)

Memorandum of the Imperial German Government on the Treatment of Armed Merchantmen.

I.

1. Even before the outbreak of the present war the British government had given English shipping companies the opportunity to arm their merchant vessels with guns. On March 26, 1913, Winston Churchill, then first lord of the admiralty, made the declaration in the British parliament that the admiralty had called upon the shipowners to arm a number of first-class liners for protection against danger menaced in certain cases by fast auxiliary cruisers of other powers; the liners were not, however, to assume the character of auxiliary cruisers themselves. The government desired to place at the disposal of the shipowners the necessary guns, sufficient ammunition and suitable personnel for the training of the gun crews.

2. The English shipowners have readily responded to the call of the admiralty. Thus Sir Owen Philipps, president of the Royal Mail Steam Packet company, was able to inform the stockholders of his company in May, 1913, that the larger steamers of the company were equipped with guns; furthermore, the British admiralty published in January, 1914, a list, according to which twenty-nine steamers of various English lines carried guns aft.

3. As a matter of fact, German cruisers ascertained soon after the outbreak of the war that English liners were armed. For example, the steamer La Correntina, of the Houlder line, of Liverpool, which was captured by the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Friedrich Wilhelm on Oct. 7, 1914, had two 4.7-inch guns aft. On Feb. 1, 1915, a German submarine was shelled in the channel by an English yacht.

II.

1. With regard to the legal character of armed merchantmen in international law, the British government has taken the position in respect of its own merchantmen that such vessels retain the character of peaceable merchant vessels as long as they carry arms for the defensive purposes only. In accordance with this, the British ambassador at Washington, in a note dated Aug. 25, 1914, gave the American government the fullest assurances that British merchant vessels were never armed for purposes of attack, but solely for defense, and that they consequently never fire unless first fired upon. On the other hand, the British government set up the principle for armed vessels of other flags that they are to be treated as war vessels. Number 1 of order 1 of the prize court rules, promulgated by the order in council of Aug. 5, 1914, expressly provides "ship of war shall include armed ship."

2. The German government has no doubt that a merchantman assumes a warlike character by armament with guns, regardless of whether the guns are intended to serve for defense or attack. It considers any warlike activity of an enemy merchantman contrary to international law, although it accords consideration to the opposite view by treating the crew of such vessel not as pirates but as belligerents. The details of its position are set forth in the memorandum on the treatment of armed merchantmen in neutral ports communicated to the American government in October, 1914, the contents of which were likewise communicated to other neutral powers.

3. Some of the neutral powers have accepted the position of the British government and therefore permitted armed merchantmen of the belligerent powers to stay in their ports and shipyards without the restrictions which they had imposed on ships of war through their neutrality regulations. Some, however, have taken the contrary view and subjected armed merchantmen of belligerents to the neutrality rules applicable to ships of war.

III.

1. During the course of the war the armament of English merchantmen has been more and more generally carried out. From reports of the German naval forces numerous cases became known in which English merchantmen not only offered armed resistance to the German war vessels, but proceeded to attack them on their own initiative, and in so doing they frequently even made use of false flags. A list of such cases is found in exhibit 4 [not printed] which from the nature of 'the matter can include only a part of the attacks which were actually made. It is also shown by this list that the practice described is not limited to English merchantmen, but is imitated by the merchantmen of England's allies.

2. The explanation of the action of the armed English merchantmen described is contained in exhibits 5 to 12 [not printed] which are photographic reproductions of confidential instructions of the British admiralty found by German naval forces on captured ships. These instructions regulate in detail artillery attack by English merchantmen on German submarines. They contain exact regulations touching the reception, treatment, activity and control of the British gun crews taken on board merchantmen; for example, the crew are not to wear uniform in neutral ports and thus plainly belong to the British navy. Above all it is shown by the instructions that these armed vessels are not to await any action of maritime war on the part of the German submarines, but are to attack them forthwith. In this respect the following regulations are particularly instructive:

a. The instructions for guidance in the use, care and maintenance of armament in defensively armed merchant ships provide in the section headed "Action," in paragraph 4: "It is not advisable to open fire at a range greater than 800 yards unless the enemy has already opened fire." From this it is the duty of the merchantman in principle to open fire without regard to the attitude of the submarine.

b. The instructions regarding submarines applicable to vessels carrying a defensive armament prescribe under No. 3: "If a submarine is obviously pursuing a ship by day and it is evident to the master that she has hostile intentions, the ship pursued should open fire in self-defense, notwithstanding the submarine may not have committed a definite hostile act such as firing a gun or torpedo." From this also the mere appearance of a submarine in the wake of a merchantman affords sufficient occasion for an armed attack.

In all these orders, which do not apply merely to the zone of maritime war around England, but are unrestricted as regards the whole world, the greatest emphasis is laid on secrecy, plainly in order that the action of merchantmen, in absolute contradiction of international law and the British assurances, might remain concealed from the enemy as well as the neutrals.

3. It is thus made plain that the armed English merchantmen have official instructions to attack the German submarines treacherously wherever they come near them; that is to say, orders to conduct relentless warfare against them. Since England's rules of maritime war are adopted by her allies without question, the proof must be taken as demonstrated in respect of the armed merchantmen of the other enemy countries also.

IV.

In the circumstances set forth above enemy merchantmen armed with guns no longer have any right to be considered as peaceable vessels of commerce. Therefore the German naval forces will receive orders, within a short period, paying consideration to the interests of the neutrals, to treat such vessels as belligerents.

The German government brings this status of affairs to the knowledge of the neutral powers in order that they may warn their nationals against continuing to intrust their persons or property to armed merchantmen of the powers at war with the German empire.

Berlin, Feb. 8, 1916.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

German Embassy, Washington, Feb. 23, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: With reference to our conversation of yesterday I beg to state that, according to wireless information which I received from my government, English newspapers, amongst others the London Times and Daily Graphic, dealing with the question of armed merchantmen, openly declare that British merchantmen have no intention to conform even to the American viewpoint which permits arming of merchantmen for purposes of defense only.

The naval correspondent of the London Times, in the edition of Feb. 10, admits that steamers Kashgar, City of Marseilles and the French steamer Plata opened fire on submarines after sighting them. The correspondent then, referring to the episode of the Clan McTavish, says that it did not meet deserved success, but that it shows the readiness with which merchantmen can "attack."

Likewise, Daily Graphic in an article of Feb. 12, dealing with the same question, says: "Let it be understood that we shall not limit our action to defensive measures." A similar utterance is reported about the Daily Graphic of Feb. 22.

On the other hand, the semi-official North German Gazette on Feb. 25, referring to President Wilson's letter to Senator Stone, as viewed by Reuter, publishes the following article:

"The principles stated in the German memorandum are by no means opposed to international law, for secret orders of the British admiralty published in the memorandum expressly instruct armed British merchantmen not only to defend themselves but to attack also. Numerous incidents quoted in the memorandum give further proof that the ships follow this instruction. Such vessels according to international law cease to be peaceful trading ships. On the other hand, the precedent taken by our enemies appears as gross breach of law of nations, since they through merchantmen commit acts of warfare that only a real man-of-war is entitled to. If President Wilson in his letter to Senator Stone says that announced measures against armed enemy merchant ships are contrary to express assurances given by Germany and Austria-Hungary, this is apparently caused by a misunderstanding. For these assurances referred only to peaceful liners and not to such ships whose armament is connected with aggressive purposes. These misunderstandings were apparently caused by the fact that the memorandum with annexes is not yet in the hands of the American government and that therefore the president is so far unable to examine both."

I am, etc.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE GERMAN EMBASSY.

German Embassy, Washington.
(Memorandum.)

The imperial German government, on account of the friendly relations which have always existed between the two great nations and earnestly desiring to continue them, wishes to explain the U-boat question once more to the American government.

At the outbreak of the war the German government, acting upon the suggestion of the United States, immediately expressed its readiness to ratify the declaration of London. At that time a German prize code had already been issued, which was entirely—and without modification—based upon the rules of the declaration of London. Germany thereby proved her willingness to recognize fully the existing rules of international law which insure the freedom of the sea for the legitimate trade of neutral nations, not only among themselves but also with belligerent countries.

Great Britain, on the other hand, declined to ratify the declaration of London and, after the outbreak of the war, began to restrict the legitimate trade of the neutrals in order to hit Germany. The contraband provisions were systematically extended on Aug. 5, 20, Sept. 21, and Oct. 29, 1914. On Nov. 3, 1914, the order of the British admiralty followed, declaring the whole North sea a war zone, in which commercial shipping would be exposed to most serious dangers from mines and men-of-war. Protests from neutrals were of no avail, and from that time on the freedom of neutral commerce with Germany was practically destroyed. Under these circumstances Germany was compelled to resort, in February, 1915, to reprisals in order to fight her opponents' measures, which were absolutely contrary to international law. She chose for this purpose a new weapon, the use of which had not yet been regulated by international law and, in doing so, could not and did not violate any existing rules, but only took into account the peculiarity of this new weapon, the submarine boat.

The use of the submarine naturally necessitated a restriction of the free movements of neutrals and constituted a danger for them which Germany intended to ward off by a special warning analogous to the warning England had given regarding the North sea.

As both belligerents—Germany in her note of Feb. 17, 1915 and Great Britain in those of Feb. 18 and 20, 1915—claimed that their proceeding was only enacted in retaliation for the violation of international law by their opponents, the American government approached both parties for the purpose of trying to re-establish international law as it had been in force before the war. Germany was asked to adapt the use of her new weapon to the rules which had been existing for the former naval weapons, and England not to interfere with the food supplies intended for the noncombatant German population and to admit their distribution under American supervision. Germany, on March 1, 1915, declared her willingness to comply with the proposal of the American government, whilst England, on the other hand, declined to do so. By the order in council of March 11, 1915, Great Britain abolished even what had remained of the freedom of neutral trade with Germany and her neutral neighbors. England's object was to starve Germany into submission by these illegal means.

Germany, after neutral citizens had lost their lives against her wish and intention, nevertheless, in the further course of the war, complied with the wishes of the American government regarding the use of submarines. The rights of neutrals regarding legal trading were, in fact, nowhere limited by Germany.

Then England made it impossible for submarines to conform with the old rules of international law by arming nearly all merchantmen and by ordering the use of the guns on merchant vessels for attack. Photographic reproductions of those instructions have been transmitted to neutral governments with the memorandum of the German government of Feb. 8, 1916. These orders are obviously in contradiction with the note delivered by the British ambassador in Washington to the American government on Aug. 25, 1914. On account of the proposals made by the United States on Jan. 28, 1916, regarding disarmament, the imperial government hoped that these facts would enable the neutral governments to obtain the disarmament of the merchant ships of her opponents. The latter, however, continued with great energy to arm their merchantmen with guns.

The principle of the United States government not to keep their citizens off belligerent merchant ships has been used by Great Britain and her allies to arm merchant ships for offensive purposes. Under these circumstances merchantmen can easily destroy submarines, and, if their attack fails, still consider themselves in safety by the presence of American citizens on board.

The order to arm on British merchantmen was supplemented by instructions to the masters of such ships to hoist false flags and to ram U-boats. Reports on payments of premiums and bestowals of decorations to successful masters of merchantmen show the effects of these orders. England's allies have adopted this position.

Now Germany is facing the following facts:

a. A blockade contrary to international law (compare American note to England of Nov. 5, 1915) has for one year been keeping neutral trade from German ports and is making German exports impossible.

b. For eighteen months, through the extending of contraband provisions in violation of international law (compare American note to England of Nov. 5, 1915), the overseas trade of neighboring neutral countries, so far as Germany is concerned, has been hampered.

c. The interception of mails in violation of international law (compare American memorandum to England of Jan. 10, 1916) is meant to stop any intercourse of Germany with foreign countries.

d. England, by systematically and increasingly oppressing neutral countries, following the principle of "might before right," has prevented neutral trade on land with Germany so as to complete the blockade of the central powers intended to starve their civil population.

e. Germans met by our enemies on the high seas are deprived of their liberty no matter whether they are combatants or noncombatants.

f. Our enemies have armed their merchant vessels for offensive purposes, theoretically making it impossible to use our U-boats according to the principles set forth in London declaration.

(Compare American memorandum of Feb. 8, 1916.)

The English white book of Jan. 5, 1916, on the restriction of German trade, boasts that by British measures Germany's export trade has been stopped almost entirely, whilst her imports are subject to England's will.

The Imperial government feels confident that the people of the United States, remembering the friendly relations that for the last hundred years have existed between the two nations, will, in spite of the difficulties put into the way by our enemies, appreciate the German viewpoint as laid down above. *INFORMAL LETTER FROM THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, March, 23, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I did not fail to communicate to my government copy of your unofficial letter of the 18th January relative to submarine warfare.

My government has given the matter its careful consideration in consultation with the allied governments and, in obedience to my instructions, I beg to communicate the accompanying memorandum embodying its views.

I am, etc. CECIL SPRING RICE.

(Inclosure—Translation.)

British Embassy, Washington, D. C.

(Memorandum.)

Upon perusal of the personal letter addressed under date of Jan. 18 last by the honorable secretary of state of the United States to the ambassador of England at Washington, the government of his Britannic majesty could not but appreciate the lofty sentiments by which Mr. Lansing was inspired on submitting to the countries concerned certain considerations touching the defensive armament of merchant vessels. But the enemy's lack of good faith, evidenced in too many instances to permit of their being regarded as isolated accidents, justifies the most serious doubt as to the possibility of putting into practice the suggestions thus formulated.

From a strictly legal standpoint, it must be admitted that the arming of merchant vessels for defense is their acknowledged right. It was established in some countries by long usage, in other countries it was expressly sanctioned by the legislature, such being the case in the United States, in particular.

It being so, it seems obvious that any request that a belligerent forego lawful means of protection from the enemy's unlawful attacks places upon him, whoever he may be, who formulates the proposition, the duty and responsibility of compelling that enemy to desist from such attacks, for the said enemy would otherwise be encouraged rather to persist in that course. Now the suggestions above referred to do not provide any immediately efficacious sanction.

It is a matter of public knowledge that Germany as early as August, 1914, straddled mines over the northern seas of Europe and later other seas without regard to any of the requirements of international law. The attendant loss of human lives and of vessels, though neutral, carrying innocent cargo was large. The perpetrators of those acts appear to have drawn encouragement from impunity.

The first act of that nature dates back to Oct. 26, 1914. On that date, the French mail steamer Amiral Ganteaume, unarmed, carrying from one point on the French coast to another 2,500 civilian refugees, largely consisting of women, children, and old men, was torpedoed without summons. Many lives were lost. After a thoroughgoing inquiry into the circumstances of the outrage, France served every neutral power with a statement thereof, but no useful result was achieved. As no sanction intervened, crimes of that description were repeated in large numbers thereafter.

In February of last year Germany again grew so bold as to proclaim that it generalized its criminal action while limiting it to the northern seas of Europe. Whereupon and soon thereafter it began the same proceedings in the Atlantic ocean, the Mediterranean and wherever a chance offered, and attacked neutral as well as allied vessels, passenger ships as well as freighters.

Great Britain is unable to agree that upon a nonguaranteed German promise human life may be surrendered defenseless to the mercy of an enemy who, in circumstances of this kind as in many others, has shown himself to be both faithless and lawless.

At the end of his letter, the honorable secretary of state hypothetically considered the possibility of eventual decisions under which armed merchant vessels might be treated as auxiliary cruisers.

It is his Britannic majesty's government's conviction that the realization of such a hypothesis which would materially modify, to Germany's advantage, the statement of views published in this respect by the American government on Sept. 19, 1914, cannot be given practical consideration by the American authorities.

Such a modification indeed would be inconsistent with the general principles of neutrality as sanctioned in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the preamble to the thirteenth convention of The Hague concerning maritime neutrality. Moreover the result would be contrary to the stipulations of the seventh convention of The Hague concerning the transformation of merchant vessels into warships. Finally, if armed merchant vessels were to be treated as auxiliary cruisers, they would possess the right of making prizes, and this would mean the revival of privateering.

MEMORANDUM ON THE STATUS OF ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS.

Department of State, Washington, March 23, 1916.

I.

The status of an armed merchant vessel of a belligerent is to be considered from two points of view: First, from that of a neutral when the vessel enters its ports; and, second, from that of an enemy when the vessel is on the high seas.

First—An Armed Merchant Vessel in Neutral Ports.

1. It is necessary for a neutral government to determine the status of an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality which enters its jurisdiction, in order that the government may protect itself from responsibility for the destruction of life and property by permitting its ports to be used as bases of hostile operations by belligerent warships.

2. If the vessel carries a commission or orders issued by a belligerent government and directing it under penalty to conduct aggressive operations, or if it is conclusively shown to have conducted such operations, it should be regarded and treated as a warship.

3. If sufficient evidence is wanting, a neutral government, in order to safeguard itself from liability for failure to preserve its neutrality, may reasonably presume from the facts the status of an armed merchant vessel which frequents its waters. There is no settled rule of international law as to the sufficiency of evidence to establish such a presumption. As a result a neutral government must decide for itself the sufficiency of the evidence which it requires to determine the character of the vessel. For the guidance of its port officers and other officials a neutral government may therefore declare a standard of evidence, but such standard may be changed on account of the general conditions of naval warfare or modified on account of the circumstances of a particular case. These changes and modifications may be made at any time during the progress of the war, since the determination of the status of an armed merchant vessel in neutral waters may affect the liability of a neutral government.

Second—An Armed Merchant Vessel on the High Seas.

1. It is necessary for a belligerent warship to determine the status of an armed merchant vessel of an enemy encountered on the high seas, since the rights of life and property of belligerents and neutrals on board the vessel may be impaired if its status is that of an enemy warship.

2. The determination of warlike character must rest in no case upon presumption but upon conclusive evidence, because the responsibility for the destruction of life and property depends on the actual facts of the case and cannot be avoided or lessened by a standard of evidence which a belligerent may announce as creating a presumption of hostile character. On the other hand, to safeguard himself from possible liability for unwarranted destruction of life and property the belligerent should, in the absence of conclusive evidence, act on the presumption that an armed merchantman is of peaceful character.

3. A presumption based solely on the presence of an armament on a merchant vessel of an enemy is not a sufficient reason for a belligerent to declare a vessel to be a warship and proceed to attack it without regard to the rights of the persons on board. Conclusive evidence of a purpose to use the armament for aggression is essential. Consequently an armament which a neutral government, seeking to perform its neutral duties, may presume to be intended for aggression, might in fact on the high seas be used solely for protection. A neutral government has no opportunity to determine the purpose of an armament on a merchant vessel unless there is evidence in the ship's papers or other proof as to its previous use, so that the government is justified in substituting an arbitrary rule of presumption in arriving at the status of the merchant vessel. On the other hand, a belligerent warship can on the high seas test by actual experience the purpose of an armament on an enemy merchant vessel, and so determine by direct evidence the status of the vessel.

Summary.

The status of an armed merchant vessel as a warship in neutral waters may be determined, in the absence of documentary proof or conclusive evidence of previous aggressive conduct, by presumption derived from all the circumstances of the case.

The status of such vessel as a warship on the high seas must be determined only upon conclusive evidence of aggressive purpose, in the absence of which it is to be presumed that the vessel has a private and peaceable character, and it should be so treated by an enemy warship.

In brief, a neutral government may proceed upon the presumption that an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is armed for aggression, while a belligerent should proceed on the presumption that the vessel is armed for protection. Both of these presumptions may be overcome by evidence—the first by secondary or collateral evidence, since the fact to be established is negative in character; the second by primary and direct evidence, since the fact to be established is positive in character.

II.

The character of the evidence upon which the status of an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is to be determined when visiting neutral waters and when traversing the high seas having been stated, it is important to consider the rights and duties of neutrals and belligerents as affected by the status of armed merchant vessels in neutral ports and on the high seas.

First—The Relations of Belligerents and Neutrals as Affected by the Status of Armed Merchant Vessels in Neutral Ports.

1. It appears to be the established rule of international law that warships of a belligerent may enter neutral ports and accept limited hospitality there upon condition that they leave, as a rule, within twenty-four hours after their arrival.

2. Belligerent warships are also entitled to take on fuel once in three months in ports of a neutral country.

3. As a mode of enforcing these rules a neutral has the right to cause belligerent warships failing to comply with them, together with their officers and crews, to be interned during the remainder of the war.

4. Merchantmen of belligerent nationality armed only for purposes of protection against the enemy are entitled to enter and leave neutral ports without hindrance in the course of legitimate trade.

5. Armed merchantmen of belligerent nationality under a commission or orders of their government to use, under penalty, their armament for aggressive purposes, or merchantmen which, without such commission or orders, have used their armaments for aggressive purposes, are not entitled to the same hospitality in neutral ports as peaceable armed merchantmen.

Second—The Relations of Belligerents and Neutrals as Affected by the Status of Armed Merchant Vessels on the High Seas.

1. Innocent neutral property on the high seas cannot legally be confiscated, but is subject to inspection by a belligerent. Resistance to inspection removes this immunity and subjects the property to condemnation by a prize court, which is charged with the preservation of the legal rights of the owners of neutral property.

2. Neutral property engaged in contraband trade, breach of blockade, or unneutral service obtains the character of enemy property and is subject to seizure by a belligerent and condemnation by a prize court.

3. When hostile and innocent property is mixed, as in the case of a neutral ship carrying a cargo which is entirely or partly contraband, this fact can only be determined by inspection. Such innocent property may be of uncertain character, as it has been frequently held that it is more or less contaminated by association with hostile property. For example, under the declaration of London (which, so far as the provisions covering this subject are concerned, has been adopted by all the belligerents) the presence of a cargo which in bulk or value consists of 50 per cent contraband articles impresses the ship with enemy character and subjects it to seizure and condemnation by a prize court.

4. Enemy property, including ships and cargoes, is always subject to seizure and condemnation. Any enemy property taken by a belligerent on the high seas is a total loss to the owners. There is no redress in a prize court. The only means of avoiding loss is by flight or successful resistance. Enemy merchant ships have, therefore, the right to arm for the purpose of self-protection.

5. A belligerent warship is any vessel which, under commission or orders of its government imposing penalties or entitling it to prize money, is armed for the purpose of seeking and capturing or destroying enemy property or hostile neutral property on the seas. The size of the vessel, strength of armament, and its defensive or offensive force are immaterial.

6. A belligerent warship has, incidental to the right of seizure, the right to visit and search all vessels on the high seas for the purpose of determining the hostile or innocent character of the vessels and their cargoes. If the hostile character of the property is known, however, the belligerent warship may seize the property without exercising the right of visit and search which is solely for the purpose of obtaining knowledge as to the character of the property. The attacking vessel must display its colors before exercising belligerent rights.

7. When a belligerent warship meets a merchantman on the high seas which is known to be enemy owned and attempts to capture the vessel, the latter may exercise its right of self-protection either by flight or by resistance. The right to capture and the right to prevent capture are recognized as equally justifiable.

8. The exercise of the right of capture is limited, nevertheless, by certain accepted rules of conduct based on the principles of humanity and regard for innocent property, even if there is definite knowledge that some of the property, cargo as well as the vessel, is of enemy character. As a consequence of these limitations, it has become the established practice for warships to give merchant vessels an opportunity to surrender or submit to visit and search before attempting to seize them by force. The observance of this rule of naval warfare tends to prevent the loss of life of noncombatants and the destruction of innocent neutral property which would result from sudden attack.

9. If, however, before a summons to surrender is given, a merchantman of belligerent nationality, aware of the approach of an enemy warship, uses its armament to keep the enemy at a distance, or after it has been summoned to surrender it resists or flees, the warship may properly exercise force to compel surrender.

10. If the merchantman finally surrenders, the belligerent warship may release it or take it into custody. In the case of an enemy merchantman it may be sunk, but only if it is impossible to take it into port, and provided always that the persons on board are put in a place of safety. In the case of a neutral merchantman, the right to sink it in any circumstance is doubtful.

11. A merchantman is entitled to exercise the right of self-protection may do so when certain of attack by an enemy warship, otherwise the exercise of the right would be so restricted as to render it ineffectual. There is a distinct difference, however, between the exercise of the right of self-protection and the act of cruising the seas in an armed vessel for the purpose of attacking enemy naval vessels.

12. In the event that merchant ships of belligerent nationality are armed and under commission or orders to attack in all circumstances certain classes of enemy naval vessels for the purpose of destroying them, and are entitled to receive prize money for such service from their government or are liable to a penalty for failure to obey the orders given, such merchant ships lose their status as peaceable merchant ships and are to a limited extent incorporated in the naval forces of their government, even though it is not their sole occupation to conduct hostile operations.

13. A vessel engaged intermittently in commerce and under a commission or orders of its government imposing a penalty, in pursuing and attacking enemy naval craft, possesses a status tainted with a hostile purpose which it cannot throw aside or assume at will. It should, therefore, be considered as an armed public vessel and receive the treatment of a warship by an enemy and by neutrals. Any person taking passage on such a vessel cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship. A private vessel, engaged in seeking enemy naval craft, without such a commission or orders from its government, stands in a relation to the enemy similar to that of a civilian who fires upon the organized military forces of a belligerent, and is entitled to no more considerate treatment.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
American Embassy, Berlin, April 11, 1916.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith to the department a copy and translation of a note verbale, dated April 11, 1916, received from the imperial foreign office, inclosing a copy of an official order said to have been issued by the English admiralty for armed English merchant vessels for the event of meeting submarines, which order was found on the English steamer Appam, brought in as a prize by the German ship Moewe.

The substance of this note is to-day being cables to the department.

I am, etc., For the ambassador, J. C. GREW.

(Inclosure—Translation.)

Foreign Office, Berlin, April 11, 1916.

Note Verbale.

The foreign office has the honor to transmit herewith to the embassy of the United States of America a copy of an official order issued by the English admiralty for armed English merchant vessels for the event of meeting submarines. The order was found on board the English steamer Appam, brought in as a prize by his majesty's ship Moewe.

It is evident from this official order also that the English merchant vessels are to proceed aggressively against any submarine which comes in sight; it is therefore likewise in conflict with the assertion of the British government that English merchant vessels are only armed for defense.

The foreign office begs to request the embassy to acquaint its government of the above.

(Subinclosure.)

Any submarine approaching a merchant vessel may be treated as hostile. Gunfire from the latest submarines is effective in fine weather and at close range. If chased by submarine armed with gun, first attempt to escape; if this proves impossible, turn and steer straight for submarine before she gets close enough to use her guns effectively. It is believed that German submarine must get into a position nearly end on in order to fire a torpedo. In submarine waters all ships should proceed at utmost speed; fast ships whose speed exceeds ten knots should zigzag, course being altered at short and irregular intervals unless proximity of other vessels makes this unsafe for navigation. Underwater speed of submarine is low and zigzagging makes it difficult for it to get into position to deliver surprise attack. Wireless warnings sent out from Saintjust and Valencia at 3 and 9 a. m. and p. m. in M V code will tell you where submarines are active, but should necessity arise warnings may be sent at any time. German submarines are fitted with wireless. No wireless signals except in emergency are allowed within 100 miles from British coast.

Most important to make landfall after dark and when position is verified give coast a wide berth. Submarines can operate as surface boats at night; all unnecessary lights therefore increase the danger. The presence of a ship may be disclosed to a submarine by the undue use of a siren.

Instruction from admiralty secret.

FORMAL LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR.*

Department of State, Washington, April 7, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Ambassador: I have received your courteous letter of the 22d ultimo and given careful consideration to the memorandum enclosed relating to the proposal for an agreement to disarm merchant vessels by the entente powers, which I unofficially submitted to you in my letter of Jan. 18, 1916.

The proposal was made with the humane purpose of removing the principal reason given by the German and Austro-Hungarian governments for the failure of their submarines to comply strictly with the rules of naval warfare in intercepting the merchant vessels of their enemies on the high seas, a practice which has resulted in an appalling loss of life among the passengers and crews of vessels which have been attacked without warning.

Believing that an arrangement, such as I had the honor to propose, would have resulted in the discontinuance by Germany and Austria-Hungary of a method of attack on merchant vessels which puts in jeopardy the lives of hundreds of men, women and children of neutral as well as belligerent nationality, I cannot but regret that the governments of the entente powers could not see their way to accede to the proposal.

The entente governments having, however, reached a decision to decline the proposed arrangement, it becomes my duty to accept their decision as final, and in the spirit in which they have made it.

I am, etc.

Imperial Japanese Embassy, Washington, May 18, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In continuation of my note of the 27th of January last [not printed] in which I took pleasure to acknowledge receipt of your note of the 24th idem containing a suggestion relating to the question of submarine warfare and armed merchantmen and to advise you that, in compliance with your request therein, the note had been referred to my government, I now beg, under instructions from Baron Ishii, to inform you that my government, finding themselves in complete agreement with the views of the allied governments, regret to be unable to see their way to meeting the suggestion of the honorable the secretary of state. SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD. (Telegram-Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, July 31, 1915.

Ambassador Gerard is directed to obtain and forward to the department of state a full report of facts relating to the sinking of the American ship Leelanaw, together with certified copies of the ship's papers.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE. (Telegram-Paraphrase.)

American Embassy, Berlin, Oct. 19, 1915.

Ambassador Gerard reports receipt of a note from the German foreign office dated Oct. 16, relating circumstances of destruction of the Leelanaw and citing in justification of the German submarine's commander the declaration of London and German prize ordinance. In addition, the note acknowledges applicability of treaty as in the case of the American vessel Frye, and states that the Leelanaw's papers have been sent to the Hamburg prize court, which will pass upon the case. Ambassador Gerard also reports that interested American parties are stated to be represented before the prize court.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, Berlin, Oct. 19, 1915.

With reference to the department's telegram dated July 31, 1915, 3 p. m., and to my telegram of even date, I have the honor to transmit herewith a translation of a note received to-day from the imperial foreign office, dated Oct. 16, 1915, relating the facts of the sinking of the American steamer Leelanaw by a German submarine on July 25, 1915.

I have, etc.

J. W. GERARD.

(Inclosure-Translation.)

Foreign Office, Berlin, Oct. 16, 1915.

Note verbale.

The foreign office has the honor to make the following reply to the note verbale of the embassy of the United States of America, dated Aug. 2, 1915, relative to the sinking of the American steamer Leelanaw.

The steamer mentioned was stopped by a German submarine at 2:10 o'clock on the afternoon of July 25, 1915, in 59 degrees 55 minutes latitude north, and 4 degrees 22 minutes longitude west. According to the ship's papers, she was on a voyage from Archangel to Belfast; the cargo consisted of flax. The commander of the submarine considered the cargo contraband and decided accordingly to sink the vessel and cargo. He saw to it that the crew of the vessel was safely taken ashore and took the ship's papers of the steamer Leelanaw on board the submarine.

Under article 21, number 22, of the German prize ordinance as amended by the ordinance of April 18, 1915 (Reichs-Gesetzblatt, p. 227), flax is to be considered absolute contraband. The ordinance of April 18, 1915, was communicated to the embassy of the United States of America by note verbale of April 22, 1915, with the request that the contents be brought to the knowledge of the American government. It was possible therefore for the shippers and captain of the steamer Leelanaw to have knowledge of the German contraband regulations. The goods were destined for an English port; thus the contraband was liable to seizure without further formality (vide article 30 of the German prize ordinance; article 31 of the declaration of London). According to value and bulk, the contraband formed more than half the whole cargo; consequently the vessel herself was liable to confiscation (vide article 41, paragraph 2, of the German prize ordinance; article 40 of the declaration of London). Since the German commander was unable to take the steamer into a German port without exposing the submarine to danger or impairing the success of the operations in which it was engaged, he was justified in destroying the vessel (article 113 of the German prize ordinance; article 49 of the declaration of London). He fulfilled his obligation of placing all persons on board and the ship's papers in safety (article 116 of the German prize ordinance; article 50 of the declaration of London).

The commander therefore acted in conformity with the principles of international law. The legality of the measures taken by him is examinable by German prize jurisdiction according to article 1, number 2, of the German prize ordinance (article 51 of the declaration of London). The ship's papers have already been sent to the prize court at Hamburg. This court will have to decide the questions whether the destruction of the vessel and cargo was legal, whether the property sunk was liable to confiscation and to whom and in what amount indemnity is to be awarded, provided any claim therefor is before it. It is true that in the present case, as in the case of the William P. Frye, the special provisions of article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of July 11, 1799, are to be considered, pursuant to which property belonging to citizens of the United States of America may only be confiscated when its value is restored.

It appears from information received from the prize court that the American shipping interests have already entrusted a Hamburg attorney with the representation of their rights before the prize court. The foreign office begs to reserve a note concerning the outcome of the prize proceedings.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR, GERARD.
(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, Nov. 30, 1915.

Ambassador Gerard is directed to inform the German foreign office that the owners of the Leelanaw are not represented before the prize court and that for the same reason given by the United States government for refusing to submit the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid in the William P. Frye case to the prize court the United States government desires that the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid in the Leelanaw case shall be adjusted by diplomatic negotiations.

CASE OF THE APPAM.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Translation.)

German Embassy, Washington, Feb. 2, 1916.

Mr. Secretary of State: I have the honor to inform your excellency that the British steamer Appam, captured by the German naval forces, arrived at Newport News, Va., on the 1st of this month under the command of Lieut. Berg of the navy. The commanding officer intends, in accordance with article XIX. of the Prusso-American treaty of Sept. 10, 1785, to stay in an American port until further notice.

The Appam has not been converted into an auxiliary cruiser is not armed and has made no prize under Mr. Berg's command. She carries on board the crews of seven enemy vessels taken by H. M. S. Moewe who have been transferred to her by that ship.

There is on board a locked-up military party of the enemy, whose internment in the United States I request.

The crew of the Appam tried to offer resistance when the ship was captured, as the guns at hand were already in place and trained on the German warship. The members of the crew are therefore to be looked upon likewise as combatants, and I have the honor to ask of your excellency that they, too, be detained in the United States until the end of the war.

Accept, etc. J. BERNSTORFF.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR.
Department of State, Washington, Feb. 3, 1916.

My dear Mr. Ambassador: Referring to our conversation of to-day in regard to the steamer Appam, now at Norfolk in charge of a German prize crew, I have received from the collector of customs in Norfolk a list (copy of which is inclosed) [not printed] of persons on board the Appam who, the prize master asserts, are in the military service of his Britannic majesty and who he believes, therefore, should not be released from his vessel. I desire, therefore, to ask if you will be good enough to inform me as to whether any of the gentlemen named on the list are members of his majesty's armed forces.

I am, etc.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE BRITISH EMBASSY.

British Embassy, Washington, Feb. 4, 1916.

The British embassy has the honor to refer to the rule of international law now generally recognized and embodied in articles 21 and 23 of The Hague convention XIII. of 1907 and to request that the principles in question should be applied to the Appam.

These principles have been accepted by both the British and the United States governments. The queen's proclamation of 1861 interdicted the military ships of belligerents from carrying prizes made by them into British ports, harbors, roadsteads or waters, a measure of which the secretary of state of the United States expressed his approval.

In the report of the American delegates to The Hague conference it is stated that, while articles 21 and 22 seemed unobjectionable, article 23 (allowing the sequestration of prizes) "was objectionable for the reason that it involves a neutral in participation in the war to the extent of giving asylum to a prize which the belligerent may not be able to conduct to a home port. This article represents the revival of an ancient abuse and should not be approved. In this connection it is proper to note that a proposition absolutely forbidding the destruction of a neutral prize, which was vigorously supported by England and the United States, failed of adoption. Had the proposition been adopted there would have been some reason for authorizing such an asylum to be afforded in the case of neutral prizes."

This declaration shows that the Prussian treaty of 1799 (by which in any case Great Britain, not being a party, cannot be affected) was regarded as obsolete and inconsistent with modern doctrines, and the fact that the United States government adhered to the convention while reserving article 23 shows that in so far as the provisions of the treaty of 1799 conflict with the convention they are regarded as overridden by the later instrument.

The rule embodied in article 21 of the 1907 convention is of general application, and the fact that Great Britain has not ratified the convention does not affect the obligation of the United States to treat ships and property of all nations in accordance with what the attitude of the United States toward the convention shows that they themselves regarded as the general rule.

Relying on the above considerations this embassy is instructed to request that if the Appam is regarded by the United States government as a prize she should be restored to her owners and the prize crew interned.

The British embassy begs to add that according to information received the captain of the German prize crew signaled on arrival that the ship was a part of the armed naval force of the German empire. If this claim is advanced the United States government will doubtless deal with the ship according to their recognized practice. If, however, she is regarded as a prize, this embassy expresses its entire confidence that she will not be allowed to leave United States jurisdiction under German control in a condition which would enable her to undertake offensive action; and that she will not be allowed to increase or augment her force by adding to her armament or her crew or by transfer of trained men to the ship or by a change of personnel or in any other manner. The British embassy begs to add that the claim that the ship was a war vessel shows that if allowed by the United States to leave as a prize under German control she would be used by the Germans as a man-of-war; and it is needless to remind the state department of the doctrine accepted by both our governments, under which the British government would be compelled to hold the United States government responsible for any injury which she may inflict.

CECIL SPRING RICE.

Telegram from the German government concerning its opinion on Appam case:

"Appam is not an auxiliary cruiser but a prize. Therefore she must be dealt with according to article XIX. of Prusso-American treaty of 1799. Article XXI. of The Hague convention concerning neutrality at sea is not applicable, as this convention was not ratified by England and is therefore not binding in present war according to article XXVIII. The above-mentioned article XIX. authorizes a prize ship to remain in American ports as long as she pleases. Neither the ship nor the prize crew can therefore be interned nor can there be question of turning the prize over to English."

*Received at state department Feb. 8, 1916.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE BRITISH EMBASSY.

British Embassy, Washington, Feb. 12, 1916.

It has been ascertained from Norfolk that no restrictions are placed upon persons going on board the Appam at the invitation of her commander, though the latter reports daily to the collector of customs that all visitors have returned to the shore.

The British embassy cannot but view this arrangement with some anxiety and, referring to their memorandum of Feb. 3, beg to reiterate the expression of their confidence that adequate precautions are being taken with a view to preventing any increase in the armament or crew of the ship or any change in her personnel which would augment her force.

The present notification is not of course to be considered as a request for action or as a complaint, but is made in fulfilment of the duty incumbent on this embassy to inform the state department at once of any information which may reach them relative to matters appertaining to pending questions between the two governments.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE BRITISH EMBASSY.

British Embassy, Washington, Feb. 15, 1916.

The British embassy has the honor to inform the state department that the British government reserves all rights under accepted principles and practice of international law with regard to the Appam, and that any action taken in the matter by the owners in maintenance of their interests is not in any way to be considered as prejudicing any claim advanced or to be advanced by the British government.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

German Embassy, Washington, Feb. 22, 1916.

My dear Mr. Secretary: Lieut. Hans Berg of the German imperial navy and commander of H. M. S. Appam, now lying at anchor near Newport News, Va., has informed me that a libel was filed against said vessel in the United States District court for the eastern district of Virginia, at Norfolk, on the 16th day of February, 1916, by the British and African Steam Navigation Co., Limited, and that, under the authority of said court, he has been cited by the marshal of the eastern district of Virginia to appear before said court on Friday, the 3d day of March, 1916, to answer the said libel.

As the Appam was captured at sea by a German man-of-war and brought to the Virginian port as a prize ship according to the treaty existing between our countries, you may well appreciate my surprise at the action which has been taken.

Article XIX. of the treaty of 1799 between Prussia and the United States, renewed in part by article XII. of the treaty of 1828, provides that "the vessels and effects taken from" the enemies of the contracting parties may be carried freely wheresoever they please, and that such prizes shall not be "put under legal process when they come to and enter the ports of the other party * * *."

In view of the terms of the treaty, I am at a loss to understand why such action has been taken by a court of your country. It may be argued that it has been because article 21 of The Hague "convention concerning the rights and duties of neutral powers in naval war" is applicable. This article provides: "A prize may only be brought into a neutral port on account of unseaworthiness, stress of weather, or want of fuel or provisions.

"It must leave as soon as the circumstances which justified its entry are at an end. If it does not the neutral power must order it to leave at once; should it fail to obey, the neutral power must employ the means at its disposal to release it with its officers and crew and to intern the crew."

But as Great Britain has not ratified the convention the article is not binding, for the reason that article 23 provides: "The provisions of the present convention do not apply except to the contracting powers, and then only if all the belligerents are parties to the convention."

Besides, the Appam flies the naval flag of and belongs to the German government, and therefore the possession of the captors in a neutral port is the possession of their sovereign. The sovereign whose officers have captured the vessel as a prize of war remains in possession of the vessel and has full power over her. The neutral sovereign or its court can take no cognizance of the question of prize or no prize and cannot wrest from the possession of the captor a prize of war brought into its ports.

The position which I take is fully supported by an opinion of the attorney-general of the United States (7 Op., 122), the syllabus of which recites that a "foreign ship of war or any prize of hers in command of a public officer possesses in the ports of the United States the right of extrajurisdiction and is not subject to the local jurisdiction."

I would therefore most respectfully protest against the action of the United States District court and request that you may ask the attorney-general to instruct the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Virginia to appear before the United States District court and take such steps as may be necessary and proper to secure the prompt dismissal of the libel.

I am, etc.

J. BERNSTORFF.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO GERMAN AMBASSADOR.
Department of State, Washington, March 2, 1916.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 2d of February, informing me that the British steamer Appam, captured by the German naval forces, had arrived at Norfolk under the command of Lieut. Berg, of the imperial German navy, who intends, in accordance, as he believes, with article XIX. of the Prusso-American treaty of 1799, to remain in American waters until further notice, and that the Appam has not been converted into an auxiliary cruiser, is not armed, and has taken no prizes under Lieut. Berg's command. In conclusion your excellency requests internment in the United States during the remainder of the war of a military party belonging, your excellency states, to the enemy of Germany and also the internment of the crew of the Appam, inasmuch as they offered resistance to capture by his majesty's forces.

I have the honor also to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of Feb. 22, calling my attention to a libel which has been filed against the Appam in the United States District court on Feb. 16 by the British and African Steam Navigation Co., Limited, and to the fact that Lieut. Berg has been cited to appear before the court on March 3 next to answer this libel. Your excellency points out that in view of the terms of article XIX. of the treaty of 1799 and of the inoperation of The Hague convention relating to neutral rights and duties in naval warfare, you are at a loss to understand why such action has been taken in this country. Your excellency, moreover, asserts in effect that as the Appam flies the naval flag of and belongs to the German government, and as the possession of the captors is the possession of their sovereign, "the neutral sovereign or its court can take no cognizance of the question of prize or no prize and cannot wrest from the possession of the captor a prize of war brought into its ports." Your excellency, in conclusion, protests against the action of the court and requests that the attorney-general instruct the proper United States district attorney to take such steps as may be necessary and proper to secure the prompt dismissal of the libel.

Article XIX. of the treaty of 1799, to which your excellency refers, reads as follows:

"The vessels of war, public and private, of both parties, shall carry (conduit) freely, wheresoever they please, the vessels and effects taken (pris) from their enemies, without being obliged to pay any duties, charges or fees to officers of admiralty, of the customs or any others; nor shall such prizes (prises) be arrested, searched or put under legal process, when they come to and enter the ports of the other party, but may freely be carried (conduites) out again at any time by their captors (vaisseaux) to the places expressed in their commissions, which the commanding officer of such vessel (le dit vaisseau) shall be obliged to show. But conformably to the treaties existing between the United States and Great Britain, no vessel (vaisseau) that shall have made a prize (prise) upon British subjects shall have a right to shelter in the ports of the United States, but if (il est) forced therein by tempests, or any other danger or accident of the sea, they (il sera) shall be obliged to depart as soon as possible."

This translation is taken from the published treaties of the United States, and while not conforming strictly to the original French text (copy of which is inclosed), is sufficiently accurate for the purposes of this note. At the outset it may be pointed out that as the object of this provision was to mollify the existing practice of nations as to asylum for prizes brought into neutral ports by men-of-war, it is subject to a strict interpretation when its privileges are invoked in a given case in modification of the established rule. By a reasonable interpretation of article XIX., however, it seems clear that it is applicable only to prizes which are brought into American ports by vessels of war. The Appam, however, your excellency is aware, was not accompanied by a ship of war, but came into the port of Norfolk alone in charge of a prize master and crew. Moreover, the treaty article allows to capturing vessels the privileges of carrying out their prizes again "to the places expressed in their commissions." The commissions referred to are manifestly those of the captor vessels which accompany prizes into port and not those of the officers of the prizes arriving in port without convoy, and it is clear that the port of refuge was not to be made a port of ultimate destination or indefinite asylum. In the case of the Appam the commission of Lieut. Berg, a copy of which was given to the collector of customs at Norfolk, not only is a commission of a prize master, but directs him to bring the Appam to the nearest American port and "there to lay her up." In the opinion of the government of the United States, therefore, the case of the Appam does not fall within the evident meaning of the treaty provision which contemplates temporary asylum for vessels of war accompanying prizes while en route to the places named in the commander's commission, but not the deposit of the spoils of war in an American port. In this interpretation of the treaty, which I believe is the only one warranted by the terms of the provision and by the British treaties referred to in article XIX., and by other contemporaneous treaties, the government of the United States considers itself free from any obligation to accord the Appam the privileges stipulated in article XIX. of the treaty of 1799.

Under this construction of the treaty the Appam can enjoy only those privileges usually granted by maritime nations, including Germany, to prizes of war—namely, to enter neutral ports only in case of stress of weather, want of fuel and provisions, or necessity of repairs, but to leave as soon as the cause of their entry has been removed.

As to the grounds upon which the application for the libel of the Appam by the United States court was made, this department has no direct information; but it is understood that the libellant contends that the Appam is not, assuming that it is a prize of the German government, the property of that government, but that, on the contrary, the title to the vessel is now properly in the British owners. Whether in these circumstances the United States court has properly or improperly assumed jurisdiction of the case and taken custody of the ship is a legal question which, according to American practice, must now be decided by the courts of this country. With the purpose, however, of having your excellency's views as to this matter brought to the attention of the court, I have transmitted your note of Feb. 22 to the attorney-general, with a request that he instruct the United States district attorney to appear in the case as amicus curiae and present to the court a copy of your excellency's note.

As to the internment of the military party which your excellency states was on board the Appam, as well as the officers and crew who offered resistance to capture by his majesty's ships, I have the honor to inform you that the government has, after due consideration, concluded that they should be released from detention on board the Appam, together with their personal effects.

Accept, etc.,

ROBERT LANSING.

German Embassy, Washington, March 14, 1916.

My dear Mr. Secretary: Referring to previous correspondence in regard to H. M. S. Appam, I am informed by our counsel that the state and treasury departments, mainly through the collector of customs, have been requesting the District court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia to guard against two things: (1) An augmentation of the crew of the Appam; and (2) an attempt on her part to escape; and that such action would tend to disturb the peace of mind of the court.

What I cannot understand on what theory the court can be asked to have anything to do with questions of augmentation, I can readily appreciate its desire to prevent any possible escape so long as court proceedings are pending.

In view of the action of the departments, the court appears unwilling to permit the ship to continue in the stream with only two keepers, and has requested counsel to consent to her removal to a wharf or some safer anchorage.

Lieut. Berg objects to her being taken to a wharf on account of increased difficulty of controlling his crew, the danger of annoyance from curiosity seekers and the possibility of injury from hostile sources.

Because of the divergent wishes in this respect, I believe that the court will be fully satisfied and at the same time Lieut. Berg can carry out his wishes. If I now assure you, as I do, that, while reserving all the rights of the German government in this case, both before the court and in our diplomatic negotiations, and with a further reservation that such assurance and agreement shall be without prejudice to the defense, no change shall be made in the status quo with respect to augmentation of the crew or equipment that might be considered a breach of neutrality, and that no attempt to run the vessel away will be made so long as said ship remains under the custody of said court.

I would therefore most respectfully request that you may communicate my assurance to the treasury department, and that both departments may communicate through the proper officers with the court and inform it that, in view of my assurance, they have no further requests to make along this line at the present time, and that for the present it would not appear to be necessary that the ship be removed to a wharf.

In my note of Feb. 22 I requested you to ask the attorney-general to instruct the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Virginia to appear before the United States District court and take such steps as may be necessary and proper to secure the dismissal of the libel. At a hearing held before said court at Richmond, Va., on March 7, said attorney appeared and presented a copy of my said note of Feb. 22 to you, but did not ask for the dismissal of the libel. In view of this fact, and believing at this time that his presence in said court will not be further necessary for assisting in arriving at a solution of the case, I would most respectfully request that you may ask the attorney-general to instruct him not to appear further without securing express instruction so to do for such special reasons as your government may have for so authorizing him.

I am, etc., J. BERNSTORFF.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

German Embassy, Washington, March 16, 1916.

In reply to your kind note of the 2d instant I have the honor, in compliance with instructions, to submit to you the inclosed memorandum of the imperial government on the subject that has been received by me.

Should the government of the United States fail to concur in the imperial government's interpretation, the imperial government would propose that the construction of the treaty in question be referred to The Hague court of arbitration in the same way as the imperial government proposed in the William P. Frye case in Secretary of State von Jagow's note of Nov. 29 last, to Mr. Gerard, ambassador of the United States at Berlin, provided that the status quo of the steamship Appam will remain unchanged throughout the arbitration proceedings and that the steamer will be allowed to remain with her prize crew in an American port during that time.

Accept, etc., J. BERNSTORFF.

MEMORANDUM.

German Embassy.

The imperial government does not consider correct the interpretation of the department of state of article XIX. of the treaty of 1799 as given in the note.

The department of state criticized that the Appam was not brought into port by a warship, but arrived only with a prize crew on board.

The treaty of 1799, referring to prizes accompanied by a warship, speaks, of course, of commercial warfare as it was usual in those times and which could be carried on by both parties only by privateers. This made it necessary that the prize was brought into port by the capturing vessel. The development of modern cruiser warfare, where, as a rule, the warship sends her prize into port by a military prize crew, cannot render the stipulations of article XIX. of said treaty null and void. The prize masters and prize crew, who represent the authority of the belligerent state, now take the place which the capturing vessel held formerly. That such stipulations are not in contradiction to the general rules of international law, and that, therefore, the treaty is not subject to the especially strict interpretation given to it by the department of state, is proved by article XXIII. of The Hague convention regarding neutrality on sea, which was adopted by a great majority, although under reservation by the United States, Great Britain and Japan.

The department of state missed, in the commission of Lieut. Berg, an order to take the prize into a German port, as it is unwilling to admit the permanent internment of the German prize in an American port as a consequence of the treaty. As proved by the last but obsolete sentences of article XIX. of the treaty of 1799 and article XIX. of the treaty of 1799, the object of article XIX. is to grant asylum or shelter to prizes of one contracting party in the ports of the other party. The asylum naturally continues only as long as the prize crew is on board and the danger of being captured by enemy naval forces exists. Both premises prevail in this case. Lieut. Berg, an officer of the imperial navy, was commissioned by the commander of a German warship to take with him prize in an American port the asylum guaranteed by the treaty. The opinion of the department of state that the commission must mention a German port of destination for the prize is unfounded, as article XIX. only provides the freedom of the prize to leave for the places which are named in the commission, but does not make the right of asylum depend on such port being mentioned. Such an indication seems superfluous if the prize is conducted by a prize crew mustered from the imperial navy, for such crew has to bring the prize into a German port as soon as possible. At present the claim for asylum naturally still exists, considering the uneven distribution of the domination of the sea between the belligerents.

As long as the right of asylum lasts the jurisdiction of American courts over the prize is formally excluded by article XIX.; a German prize court alone is competent. The opinion of the department of state that the American courts must decide about the claims of the British shipping company is incompatible with the treaty stipulations.

It is therefore respectfully requested that the prize crew should be permitted to remain in the American port and also that the legal steps before an American court should be suspended.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
British Embassy, Washington, March 31, 1916.

My dear Mr. Secretary: On Feb. 3 last, I had the honor, under instructions from my government, to request that if the Appam were regarded by the United States government as a prize she should be restored to her owners and the prize crew interned.

Since that date it has come to my knowledge that a proceeding has been brought in the admiralty court of the United States by the owners of the vessel for its restitution and that the court has taken jurisdiction of the suit. It appears that the vessel had been detained in an American port by the prize crew for more than two weeks before suit was instituted. I am informed that the vessel was in a seaworthy condition when brought into port and that the time which elapsed before the beginning of the suit was more than sufficient to supply any deficiencies of coal and provisions. The detention of the vessel for such a period of time was therefore a violation of the neutrality of the United States under the law of nations as expressed in articles XXI. and XXII. of convention XIII. as formulated at The Hague in 1907 and as previously understood and applied among the nations.

I understand that the admiralty courts of the United States have jurisdiction to decree the restitution to the owners of a prize brought into an American port by a belligerent captor when there has been a violation of American neutrality on the part of the captor. It seems to me desirable and proper that such violation of American neutrality should be called to the court's attention, not only by the private owners of the captured vessel, but also by the official representatives of the United States government.

I have the honor to request that if the United States government do not see their way clear to direct by executive order, as suggested in my note above referred to, the return of the vessel to her British owners, instructions may be given, should there be no objection, to the proper representatives of the department of justice of the United States to appear in their official capacity before the United States District court for the eastern district of Virginia, in which the suit for the recovery of the steamship Appam is pending, and to represent to that court on behalf of the government of the United States that the detention of the steamship Appam under the circumstances above set forth constituted a violation of the neutrality of the United States and apply to the court to direct the return of the vessel to her owners upon due proof of their ownership and of the facts constituting the violation of neutrality above set forth.

I am, etc.

CECIL SPRING RICE.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR.
Department of State, Washington, April 4, 1916.

My dear Mr. Ambassador: I have received your formal note of the 31st ultimo, in which you request that as the Appam had violated the neutrality of the United States by her staying in port up to the beginning of the suit now pending against her, such violation of American neutrality be called to the court's attention by the proper representatives of the department of justice on behalf of the government of the United States, and that application be made to the court to direct the return of the vessel to the owners upon due proof of their ownership and of the facts constituting a violation of neutrality.

In reply, allow me to say that as the vessel was in American jurisdiction up until the time of the filing of the suit against her, pending consideration of the question as to whether she was entitled to the privileges claimed for her by the German government by virtue of article XIX. of the treaty of 1799, and as this government reached a decision on that question only after the libel had been filed, I am unable to accept your suggestion that the presence of the Appam in American waters, in the circumstances, constituted a violation of the neutrality of the United States. Holding this view, I regret that I am unable to comply with your request to have official representations made to the court in the sense of your note under acknowledgment.

I am, etc.

ROBERT LANSING.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO GERMAN AMBASSADOR.
Department of State, Washington, April 7, 1916.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th ultimo, inclosing a memorandum of the Imperial German government on the subject of the Appam, now at Norfolk. The memorandum of the Imperial government contends, in brief, that article XIX. of the treaty of 1799 "speaks, of course, of commercial warfare as it was usual in those times and which would be carried on by both parties only by privateers," and that the development of modern cruiser warfare, in which a prize master and crew representing the authority of a belligerent state now take the place which the conveying vessel formerly held, should govern the present interpretation of the treaty. The government of the United States agrees with the German government's statement that the treaty speaks of a mode of warfare in use at the time the treaty was negotiated. It is precisely for this reason that the government of the United States does not believe that the treaty was intended to apply to circumstances of modern warfare, which are essentially different from those in vogue at the close of the eighteenth century. The government of the United States does not understand upon what ground the imperial government contends that a treaty granting concessions under specifically mentioned circumstances can be construed to apply to a situation involving other and different circumstances. To grant limited asylum in a neutral port to a prize accompanied by the capturing vessel is not the granting of a right of "laying up" in a neutral port a prize which arrives in the control of a prize master and crew.

Your excellency's government further contends that article XIX., besides being applicable to modern conditions, is not contrary to the general rules of international law, and therefore not subject to a restricting interpretation, and in support of this cites as declaratory of the general rules of international law article XXIII. of The Hague convention XIII. As indicated by the imperial government, the United States did not in the case of this convention, and never has, assented to the sequestration of prizes in its ports. The ground of this position of the United States is that it does not, in the opinion of this government, comport with the obligations of a neutral power to allow its ports to be used either as a place of indefinite refuge for belligerent prizes or as a place for their sequestration during the proceedings of prize courts. The contention of the government of the United States in its note of March 2 in this case is consistent with this long-established and well-known policy of the American government, in the light of which the treaty of 1799 was negotiated and has been enforced and applied. Provided a vessel enters an American port accompanied by a German naval vessel, article XIX. contemplates in the view of this government merely temporary sojourn of the prize in an American port and not its sequestration there pending the decision of a prize court.

Holding the view that article XIX. is not applicable to the case of the Appam, this government does not consider it necessary to discuss the contention of the imperial government that under article XIX. American courts are without jurisdiction to interfere with the prize, and for the same reason it cannot accede to the request that the "legal steps before an American court should be suspended."

In your excellency's note transmitting the memorandum of your government it is proposed that should this government fail to concur in the contentions of the imperial government the construction of the treaty in question be referred to The Hague court of arbitration in the same way as the imperial government has proposed to do in the William P. Frye case, provided that the status quo of the Appam remain unchanged throughout the arbitration proceedings and that the steamer be allowed to remain with her prize crew in an American port during that time. It is regretted that this proposal, which appeals to the principle of arbitration, of which this government is an earnest advocate, cannot be accepted in this particular case by the government of the United States. Its acceptance would manifestly defeat the very object of the United States in its reservation to article XXIII. of convention XIII. by allowing the prize to remain in an American port for an indefinite period while the arbitration proceedings were in progress, which might continue until after peace is restored. In this respect the case differs from that of the William P. Frye. Moreover, inasmuch as the Appam has been libeled in the United States District court by the alleged owners, this government, under the American system of government, in which the judicial and executive branches are entirely separate and independent, could not vouch for a continuance of the status quo of the prize during the progress of the arbitration proposed by the imperial government. The United States court having taken jurisdiction of the vessel, that jurisdiction can only be dissolved by judicial proceedings leading to a decision of the court discharging the case—a procedure which the executive cannot summarily terminate.

In these circumstances the government of the United States can only accept the proposal of the German government for the arbitration of the meaning of article XIX. of the treaty of 1799, upon the understanding that the Appam depart from the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, in the event that the libel is dismissed by the court and after she has had a reasonable time to take on board such supplies as may be necessary, in the judgment of this government, for a voyage to the nearest port subject to the sovereignty of Germany, and failing this, that she be released and the prize master and crew be interned for the remainder of the war.

Accept, etc. ROBERT LANSING.
[Judge Edmund Waddell, Jr., of the United States District court for the eastern district of Virginia decided July 29, 1916, that the Appam should be restored to its former owners.]

INTERFERENCES BY BELLIGERENTS WITH MAILS.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Jan. 4, 1916.

Department advised that British customs authorities removed from Danish steamer Oscar Second 734 bags parcel mail en route from United States to Norway, Sweden and Denmark; that British port authorities have removed from Swedish steamer Stockholm fifty-eight bags parcel mail en route Gothenburg, Sweden, to New York; that 5,000 packages of merchandise, American property, have been seized by British authorities on the Danish steamer United States on her last trip to the United States; that customs authorities at Kirkwall, on Dec. 13, seized 597 bags of parcel mail from steamer Frederick VIII, manifested for Norway, Sweden and Denmark. Other similar cases might be mentioned, such as that of the steamer Hellig Olav. Department inclined to regard parcel post articles as subject to same treatment as articles sent as express or freight in respect to belligerent search, seizure and condemnation. On the other hand, parcel post articles are entitled to the usual exemptions of neutral trade, and the protests of the government of the United States in regard to what constitutes the unlawful bringing in of ships for search in port, the illegality of so called blockade by Great Britain and the improper assumption of jurisdiction of vessels and cargoes apply to commerce using parcel post service for the transmission of commodities. Please bring this matter of parcel post formally to the attention of the British government.

The department is further informed that on Dec. 23 the entire mails, including sealed mails and presumably the American diplomatic and consular pouches, from the United States to the Netherlands were removed by British authorities from the Dutch steamer New Amsterdam; that on Dec. 26 the Dutch vessel Noorder Dyke was deprived at the Downs of American mail from the United States to Rotterdam, and that these mails are still held by British authorities. Other similar instances could be mentioned, as the cases of the steamers Rotterdam and Noordam. The department cannot admit the right of British authorities to seize neutral vessels plying directly between American and neutral European ports without touching at British ports, to bring them into port, and, while there, to remove or censor mails carried by them. Modern practice generally recognizes that mails are not to be censored, confiscated or destroyed on high seas, even when carried by belligerent mail ships. To attain same end by bringing such mail ships within British jurisdiction for purposes of search and then subjecting them to local regulations allowing censorship of mails cannot be justified on the ground of national jurisdiction. In cases where neutral mail ships merely touch at British ports, the department believes that British authorities have no international right to remove the sealed mails or to censor them on board ship. Mails on such ships never rightfully come into the custody of the British mail service, and that service is entirely without responsibility for their transit or safety.

As a result of British action, strong feeling is being aroused in this country on account of the loss of valuable letters, money orders and drafts, and foreign banks are refusing to cash American drafts, owing to the absence of any security that the drafts will travel safely in the mails. Moreover, the detention of diplomatic and consular mail is an aggravating circumstance in a practice which is generally regarded in this country as vexatiously inquisitorial and without compensating military advantage to Great Britain. Please lay this matter immediately before the British government in a formal and vigorous protest and press for a discontinuance of these unwarranted interferences with inviolable mails. Impress upon Sir Edward Grey the necessity for prompt action in this matter.

LANSING.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Translation.)

French Embassy, Washington, April 3, 1916.
Mr. Secretary of State: My government informs me that several neutral powers, the United States among them, have raised certain objections in regard to the action which the allies had to decide they must take with respect to mail matter on account of the fraud and violence exercised in that line by their enemies.

After long toleration those acts became so numerous and aggravated that it was no longer possible to acquiesce in their being indefinitely carried on. Hence the provisions which the allied governments consider to be warranted by both the circumstances and the texts but which have nevertheless given rise to the above-mentioned objections.

These objections have been carefully examined and the French and English governments have, in common accord, set forth in the inclosed memorandum the result of the said examination.

In transmitting, by order of my government, that paper to your excellency, I am instructed to express to you the hope that you will kindly recognize the weight of the arguments therein presented in regard to an action which, besides, never was circumscribed by absolute rules of limitation. In your telegram of Jan. 4 last, to the American ambassador at London and thereafter made public, your excellency only specified that: "Modern practice generally recognizes that mails are not to be censored, confiscated or destroyed on high seas, even when carried by belligerent mail ships."

If, even before late events, those practices were not unanimously followed, your excellency will judge whether the arguments and facts set forth in the inclosed note do not amply justify as we believe they do our refraining from complying with them at present.

My instructions, on the other hand, warrant my assuring your excellency that precise instructions are issued not to subject innocent neutral mails and, of course, neutral diplomatic pouches to avoidable delay.

Be pleased, etc., JUSSERAND.

Memorandum Relative to Postal Correspondence on the High Seas.

Feb. 15, 1916.

The treatment of mail correspondence carried by sea has, in the course of the present war, been the object of various uncertainties, has occasioned some confusion and at times given rise to criticisms which, for the sake of international relations and neutral commerce, the allied governments deem it advisable to dispel.

It has always been and is the paramount object of postal services to receive, carry or distribute written correspondence or missive letters. By degrees recourse was had to the same services for the transmission of printed documents, then samples, valuables, and finally, under the name of "post parcels," almost every kind of merchandise, provided only that certain conditions were met in respect of weight, bulk and packing.

It is also known that, when bearing postage stamps, any sealed wrapper, irrespective of its contents, weight or bulk, may be mailed and is treated as a letter by the postal administrations.

The reflex action of the war on that state of things suggests the following remarks:

At the time of the second conference of The Hague, in 1907, the imperial German government argued that, the telegraph offering belligerents much quicker and safer means of communication than the post, there was no longer any interest in regarding, as theretofore, postal correspondence as apt to prove contraband by analogy and in disturbing its transmission through seizure and confiscation. Their confidence won by a proposition that looked so pacific, the other powers concurred, Article I. of the eleventh convention of The Hague of 1907 stipulates, as is known, that thenceforward postal correspondence on the high seas is "inviolable."

A first remark must be made with respect to the "post parcels."

The shipment of merchandise by "parcel post" is a mode of shipment and transportation analogous to shipment and transportation on way bills or bills of lading, with this difference, that the transportation is undertaken by the mail service, which moreover sometimes turns it over to common carriers, as is the case in France.

In no wise do such "parcels" constitute "letters" or "correspondence" or "dispatches," and they are clearly not withdrawn in any way from the exercise of the rights of police, supervision, visitation and eventual seizure which belong to belligerents as to all cargoes on the high seas.

This was shown notably in a communication of the postoffice department of the United States addressed on April 8, 1915, to the French authorities and transmitting a statement in conformity therewith from the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, a vessel of the imperial German navy, regarding the post parcels shipped on the French mail steamer Floride, which the first named cruiser had captured. (See Exhibit 1.)

The allied governments have also adopted this view, which in their opinion is fully founded in law and superabundantly justified by the facts.

Among many other examples it will be sufficient to cite: 1,302 post parcels, containing together 437,510 grams of india rubber for Hamburg (steamers Tijuca, Bahia, Jaguaribe, Maranhao, Acre, Olinda, Para, Brazil); or again, 69 post parcels, containing 400 revolvers for Germany via Amsterdam (S. S. Gelria).

As regards the forwarding of letters, wrappers, envelopes and others intrusted to the postal services and generally contained in the mail bags of the postoffice of the countries which send them forth, the allied governments bring the following consideration to the notice of the neutral governments:

Between Dec. 31, 1914, and Dec. 31, 1915, the German or Austro-Hungarian naval authorities destroyed, without previous warning or visitation, thirteen mail ships (see exhibit 2) with the mail bags on board, coming from or going to neutral or allied countries, without any more concern about the inviolability of the dispatches and correspondence they carried than about the lives of the inoffensive persons aboard the ships.

It has not come to the knowledge of the allied governments that any protest touching postal correspondence was ever addressed to the imperial governments.

Under dates of Aug. 11, 17 and 18, 1915, the neutral mail steamers Iris (Norwegian), Haakon VII. (Norwegian), Germania (Swedish) had the mail bags they carried from and to all places seized on the high seas by the German naval authorities; the letters and correspondence were censored by the German authorities, as proven by the photograph herein enclosed by way of illustration (exhibit 3). [Not printed.]

The allied governments understand that subsequently the imperial German government, while announcing its intention to desist from such seizures, declared that the said seizures were and would be fully warranted in its opinion. According to the imperial German government, the eleventh convention of The Hague of 1907, not having been ratified by all the powers at present engaged in war, would be inapplicable.

Finally the supervision within the territories of the allies of various mail bags shipped on mail steamers that call at certain ports in the said territories more recently disclosed the presence in the wrappers, envelopes and mail matter of contraband articles particularly sought after by the enemy, and notably: On board the S. S. Tubantia, arriving in Europe, 174½ pounds of india rubber, of which 101 pounds of Para, highest grade, and seven parcels of wool; on board the S. S. Medan, seven parcels of crude rubber. That same supervision, exercised under the same conditions on mail bags from Europe which at first sight might have been supposed to contain nothing but correspondence, uncovered in the bags put on board the single mail steamer Zaandijk (Dutch) not less than 368 parcels of miscellaneous goods.

The following letter from the German firm of G. Vogtman & Co., dated from Hamburg, No. 16, Glockengiesserwall, Dec. 15, 1915, is particularly instructive:

(Translation.)

"For some time past we have been receiving regularly from Para invoices of crude india rubber, and you might turn your attention to that line of business. The shipments are made in shape of 'Samples without value,' registered, about 200 parcels in every mail, each containing about 320 grams of rubber, net. The trouble of doing up the parcels and the high cost of postage are amply covered by the high price commanded by the commodity here."

It is known that on Dec. 15, 1915, crude india rubber, which the German state took all up, was worth about 25 marks per kilogram, and, as the Hamburg merchant remarked, "ein guter verdienst nicht ausgeschlossen ist" (a handsome profit is not barred out).

Hostile traffic, shut out of the mastery of the seas, thus resorted to hide in mail matter in order to get through all kinds of merchandise, contraband of war even included, apparently by imposing on the postoffice departments of the neutral states.

From a legal standpoint, the right of belligerents to exercise police and supervision powers over vessels and particularly over what they carry has never, to the knowledge of the allied governments, been subject to exceptions, not any more in regard to mail bags than in regard to any other cargo; nay more, as late as 1907 the letters and dispatches themselves could be seized and confiscated.

By the eleventh convention of The Hague and for the reasons above stated, the signatory powers waived the right so to seize dispatches and declared postal correspondence to be inviolable.

The said inviolability only detracted from the public law as far as "correspondence"—that is to say, dispatches or "missive letters"—are concerned, because, as we have seen, it was thought, rightfully or wrongfully, that belligerents having in the telegraph a better medium of correspondence, correspondence by mail was of no interest in warfare. The result is, on the one hand, that inviolability does not apply to any mail matter that is not "correspondence"—that is to say, "missive letters"— and, on the other hand, that this inviolability would be given a wider scope than it possesses if it were regarded as exempting from any supervision goods and articles shipped by mail, even though they were contraband of war.

Under these conditions the allied governments announce:

1. That from the standpoint of their right of visitation and eventual arrest and seizure, merchandise shipped in post parcels needs not and shall not be treated otherwise than merchandise shipped in any other manner.

2. That the inviolability of postal correspondence stipulated by the eleventh convention of The Hague of 1907 does not in any way affect the right of the allied governments to visit and, if occasion arise, arrest and seize merchandise hidden in the wrappers, envelopes or letters contained in the mail bags.

3. That true to their engagements and respectful of genuine "correspondence," the allied governments will continue, for the present, to refrain on the high seas from seizing and confiscating such correspondence, letters or dispatches, and will insure their speediest possible transmission as soon as the sincerity of their character shall have been ascertained.

Exhibit 1.

Postoffice Department, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Division of Foreign Mails, Washington, April 8, 1915.

I have the honor to inform you that the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich delivered to the postmaster of Newport News, Va., on March 12, 144 mail bags for places in South America which had been transhipped from the French steamer Floride to the said cruiser before it sank the steamer. The dispatches, which appeared to be intact, were sent to the New York office, whence they were forwarded to destination in the same condition and at the first opportunity.

In delivering to the officials at Newport News the aforesaid dispatches the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich declared that the post parcels on board the steamship Floride had been regarded as merchandise and not as correspondence; that is the reason why he did not have them taken out of the Floride as the other mail matter was, but allowed them to sink with the vessel, basing his action on the declaration of London, according to which parcels are merchandise and not correspondence.

I further inform you that the New York post-office advised the Bordeaux office of these facts by means of a check slip.

of state for foreign affairs, to transmit to you herewith a memorandum [not printed; identical with memorandum transmitted with the note of the French ambassador April 3, 1916] stating the contentions of his majesty's government and the French government in regard to their right to detain and examine parcels and letter mails on neutral vessels.

I have, etc.

CECIL SPRING RICE.

*SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR. Department of State, Washington, May 24, 1916.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's note of April 3 last, transmitting a memorandum dated Feb. 15, 1916, and communicated in substance to the American ambassador in London on Feb. 23, in which are stated the contentions of the British and French governments in regard to the right to detain and examine parcel and letter mails en route by sea between the United States and Europe.

After a discussion of the use of the mails for the transmission of "parcels" and of the limitations to be placed on "inviolable mail," the joint memorandum of Feb. 15 closes with the following assertions:

"1. That from the standpoint of their right of visitation and eventual arrest and seizure, merchandise shipped in post parcels need not and shall not be treated otherwise than merchandise shipped in any other manner.

"2. That the inviolability of postal correspondence stipulated by the eleventh convention of The Hague of 1907 does not in any way affect the right of the allied governments to visit and, if occasion arise, arrest and seize merchandise hidden in the wrappers, envelopes or letters contained in the mail bags.

"3. That true to their engagements and respectful of genuine 'correspondence,' the allied governments will continue, for the present, to refrain on the high seas from seizing and confiscating such correspondence, letters or dispatches, and will insure their speediest possible transmission as soon as the sincerity of their character shall have been ascertained."

In reply the government of the United States desires to state that it does not consider that the postal union convention of 1906 necessarily applies to the interferences by the British and French governments with the overseas transportation of mails of which the government of the United States complains. Furthermore, the allied powers appear to have overlooked the admission of the government of the United

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE. British Embassy, Washington, April 3, 1916.

Sir: I have the honor, by direction of Sir Edward Grey, his majesty's principal secretary

States that post parcels may be treated as merchandise subject to the exercise of belligerent rights as recognized by international law. But the government of the United States does not admit that such parcels are subject to the "exercise of the rights of police, supervision, visitation and eventual seizure which belongs to belligerents as to all cargoes on the high seas," as asserted in the joint note under acknowledgment.

It is noted with satisfaction that the British and French governments do not claim, and, in the opinion of this government, properly do not claim, that their so called "blockade" measures are sufficient grounds upon which to base a right to interfere with all classes of mail matter in transit to or from the central powers. On the contrary, their contention appears to be that, as "genuine correspondence" is under conventional stipulation "inviolable," mail matter of other classes is subject to detention and examination. While the government of the United States agrees that "genuine correspondence" mail is inviolable, it does not admit that belligerents may search other private sea-borne mails for any other purpose than to discover whether they contain articles of enemy ownership carried on belligerent vessels or articles of contraband transmitted under sealed cover as letter mail, though they may intercept at sea all mails coming out of and going into ports of the enemy's coasts which are effectively blockaded. The governments of the United States, Great Britain and France, however, appear to be in substantial agreement as to principle. The method of applying the principle is the chief cause of difference.

Though giving assurances that they consider "genuine correspondence" to be "inviolable," and that they will, "true to their engagements," refrain "on the high seas" from seizing and confiscating such correspondence, the allied governments proceed to deprive neutral governments of the benefits of these assurances by seizing and confiscating mail from vessels in port instead of at sea. They compel neutral ships without just cause to enter their own ports or they induce shipping lines, through some form of duress, to send their mail ships via British ports, or they detain all vessels merely calling at British ports, thus acquiring by force or unjustifiable means an illegal jurisdiction. Acting upon this enforced jurisdiction, the authorities remove all mails, genuine correspondence as well as post parcels, take them to London, where every piece, even though of neutral origin and destination, is opened and critically examined to determine the "sincerity of their character," in accordance with the interpretation given that undefined phrase by the British and French censors. Finally, the expurgated remainder is forwarded, frequently after irreparable delay, to its destination. Ships are detained en route to or from the United States or to or from other neutral countries, and mails are held and delayed for several days and, in some cases, for weeks and even months, even though not routed to ports of North Europe via British ports. This has been the procedure which has been practiced since the announcement of Feb. 15, 1916. To some extent the same practice was followed before that date, calling forth the protest of this government on Jan. 4, 1916. But to that protest the memorandum under acknowledgment makes no reference and is entirely unresponsive. The government of the United States must again insist with emphasis that the British and French governments do not obtain rightful jurisdiction of ships by forcing or inducing them to visit their ports for the purpose of seizing their mails, or thereby obtain greater belligerent rights as to such ships than they could exercise on the high seas; for there is, in the opinion of the government of the United States, no legal distinction between the seizure of mails at sea, which is announced as abandoned, and their seizure from vessels voluntarily or involuntarily in port. The British and French practice amounts to an unwarranted limitation on the use by neutrals of the world's highway for the transmission of correspondence. The practice actually followed by the allied powers must be said to justify the conclusion, therefore, that the announcement of Feb. 15 was merely notice that one illegal practice had been abandoned to make place for the development of another more onerous and vexatious in character.

The present practice is a violation not only of the spirit of the announcement of Feb. 15, but of the rule of The Hague convention upon which it is concededly based. Aside from this, it is a violation of the prior practice of nations which Great Britain and her allies have in the past assisted to establish and maintain, notwithstanding the statement in the memorandum that "as late as 1907 the letters and dispatches themselves could be seized and confiscated." During the war between the United States and Mexico the United States forces allowed British steamers to enter and depart from the ports of Vera Cruz without molesting the mails intended for inland points. During the American civil war Lord Russell endeavored to induce the United States to concede that "her majesty's mails on board a private vessel should be exempted from visitation or detention." This exemption of mails was urged in October, 1862, in the case of British mails on board the Adela. On Oct. 31 Secretary Seward announced that "public mails of any friendly or neutral power duly certified or authenticated as such shall not be searched or opened but be put as speedily as may be convenient on the way to their designated destination." In accordance with this announcement, the government of the United States, in the case of the British steamship Peterhoff, which had been seized with her mails against the protest of her majesty's government, had her mails forwarded to destination unopened.

The same rule was followed by France, as I am advised, in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870; by the United States in the Spanish-American war of 1898, by Great Britain in the South African war, in the case of the German mail steamers Bundesrath and General; by Japan and substantially by Russia in the Russo-Japanese war of 1904. And even in the present war, as the memorandum of Great Britain and France states, their enemy, Germany, has desisted from the practice of interfering with neutral mails, even on board belligerent steamers. This is illustrated by the case of the French steamer Florida, captured by the auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, cited by the British and French governments in support of their argument regarding parcel mails. In this case the letter mails of the Florida, amounting to 144 sacks, were forwarded to their destination by the commander at the first opportunity upon arriving in the United States. It would seem, therefore, to be conclusively established that the interferences with mails of which this government justly complains are wrong in principle and in practice.

The arbitrary methods employed by the British and French governments have resulted most disastrously to citizens of the United States. Important papers which can never be duplicated, or can be duplicated only with great difficulty, such as United States patents for inventions, rare documents, legal papers relating to the settlement of estates, powers of attorney, fire insurance claims, income tax returns and similar matters, have been lost. Delays in receiving shipping documents have caused great loss and inconvenience by preventing prompt delivery of goods. In the case of the MacNiff Horticultural company of New York, large shipments of planis and bulbs from Holland were, I am informed, frozen on the wharves because possession could not be obtained in the absence of documents relating to them which had been removed from the New Amsterdam, Oosterdijk, and Rotterdam. Business opportunities are lost by failure to transmit promptly bids, specifications and contracts. The Standard Underground Cable company of Pittsburgh, for example, sent by mail a tender and specifications for certain proposed electric works to be constructed in Christiania; after several weeks of waiting, the papers having failed to arrive, the American company was told that the bids could not be longer held open and the contract was awarded to a British competitor. Checks, drafts, money orders, securities and similar property are lost or detained for weeks and months. Business correspondence relating to legitimate and bona fide trade between neutral countries, correspondence of a personal nature, and also certain official correspondence, such as money order lists and other matter forwarded by government departments, are detained, lost or possibly destroyed. For instance, the postmaster-general informs me that certain international money order lists from the United States to Germany, Greece and other countries, and from Germany to the United States, sent through the mails, have not reached their destination, though dispatched several months ago. It was necessary to have some of these lists duplicated and again dispatched by the steamship Frederick VIII., which sailed from New York on April 19, and from which all the mails intended for Germany have been taken and held in British jurisdiction. As a further example of the delay and loss consequent upon the British practice, the postmaster-general also sends me a copy of a letter from the British postal administration admitting that the mails were removed from the steamer Medan in the Downs on Jan. 30 last, and not forwarded until some time "between the 2d of February and the 2d of March," and that 132 bags of these mails "were lost during transmission to Holland on the 26th day of February by the Dutch steamship Mecklenburg." The Medan arrived safely at Rotterdam a day or two after she left the Downs. Numerous complaints similar to the foregoing have been received by this government, the details of which are available, but I believe I have cited sufficient facts to show the unprecedented and vexatious nature of the interference with mails persisted in by British and French authorities. Not only are American commercial interests injured, but rights of property are violated and the rules of international law and custom are palpably disregarded. I can only add that this continuing offense has led to such losses to American citizens and to a possible responsibility of the United States to repair them that this government will be compelled in the near future to press claims for full reclamation upon the attention of his majesty's government and that of the French republic.

The principle being plain and definite, and the present practice of the governments of Great Britain and France being clearly in contravention of the principle, I will state more in detail the position of the government of the United States in regard to the treatment of certain classes of sealed mails under a strict application of the principle upon which our governments seem to be in general accord. The government of the United States is inclined to the opinion that the class of mail matter which includes stocks, bonds, coupons and similar securities is to be regarded as of the same nature as merchandise or other articles of property and subject to the same exercise of belligerent rights. Money orders, checks, drafts, notes and other negotiable instruments which may pass as the equivalent of money, are, it is considered, also to be classed as merchandise. Correspondence, including shipping documents, money order lists and papers of that character, even though relating to "enemy supplies or exports," unless carried on the same ship as the property referred to, are, in the opinion of this government, to be regarded as "genuine correspondence," and entitled to unobstructed passage.

The government of the United States, in view of the improper methods employed by the British and French authorities in interrupting mails passing between the United States and other neutral countries and between the United States and the enemies of Great Britain, can no longer tolerate the wrongs which citizens of the United States have suffered and continue to suffer through these methods. To submit to a lawless practice of this character would open the door to repeated violations of international law by the belligerent powers on the ground of military necessity, of which the violator would be the sole judge. Manifestly a neutral nation cannot permit its rights on the high seas to be determined by belligerents or the exercise of those rights to be permitted or denied arbitrarily by the government of a warring nation. The rights of neutrals are as sacred as the rights of belligerents and must be as strictly observed.

The government of the United States, confident in the regard for international law and the rights of neutrals which the British and French governments have so often proclaimed and the disregard of which they have urged so vigorously against their enemies in the present war, expects the present practice of the British and French authorities in the treatment of mails from neutral to the United States to cease and belligerent rights as exercised to conform to the principle governing the passage of mail matter and to the recognized practice of nations. Only a radical change in the present British and French policy, restoring to the United States its full rights as a neutral power, will satisfy this government.

I have, etc.,

ROBERT LANSING.

RESTRAINTS ON COMMERCE.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE,
Department of State, Washington, Oct. 21, 1915.

Sir: I desire that you present a note to Sir Edward Grey in the sense of the following:

1. The government of the United States has given careful consideration to your excellency's notes of Jan. 7, Feb. 10, June 22, July 23, July 31 (2), Aug. 13, and to a note verbale of the British embassy of Aug. 6, relating to restrictions upon American commerce by certain measures adopted by the British government during the present war. This government has delayed answering the earlier of these notes in the hope that the announced purpose of his majesty's government "to exercise their belligerent rights with every possible consideration for the interest of neutrals" and their intention of "removing all causes of avoidable delay in dealing with American cargoes" and of causing "the least possible amount of inconvenience to persons engaged in legitimate trade," as well as their "assurances to the United States government that they would make it their first aim to minimize the inconveniences," resulting from the "measures taken by the allied governments," would in practice not unjustifiably infringe upon the neutral rights of American citizens engaged in trade and commerce. It is, therefore, a matter of regret that this hope has not been realized, but that, on the contrary, interferences with American ships and cargoes destined in good faith to neutral ports and lawfully entitled to proceed have become increasingly vexatious, causing American ship owners and American merchants to complain to this government of the failure to take steps to prevent an exercise of belligerent power in contravention of their just rights. As the measures complained of proceed directly from orders issued by the British government, are executed by British authorities, and arouse a reasonable apprehension that, if not resisted, they may be carried to an extent even more injurious to American interests, this government directs the attention of his majesty's government to the following considerations:

2. Without commenting upon the statistics presented by his majesty's government to show that the export trade of the United States has increased in volume since the war began further than to point out that the comparative values fail to take into account the increased price of commodities resulting from a state of war or to make any allowance for the diminution in the volume of trade with the neutral countries in Europe previously had with the nations at war, a diminution which compelled them to buy in other markets, I will pass directly to the matters which constitute the specific complaints of this government.

3. First. The detentions of American vessels and cargoes which have taken place since the opening of hostilities have, it is presumed, been pursuant to the enforcement of the orders in council, which were issued on Aug. 20 and Oct. 29, 1914, and March 11, 1915, and relate to contraband traffic and to the interception of trade to and from Germany and Austria-Hungary. In practice these detentions have not been uniformly based on proofs obtained at the time of seizure, but many vessels have been detained while search was made for evidence of the contraband character of cargoes or of an intention to evade the nonintercourse measures of Great Britain. The question, consequently, has been one of evidence to support a belief of—in many cases a bare suspicion of—enemy destination, or occasionally of enemy origin of the goods involved. Whether this evidence should be obtained by search at sea before the vessel or cargo is taken into port, and what the character of the evidence should be, which is necessary to justify the detention, are the points to which I direct your excellency's attention.

4. In regard to search at sea, an examination of the instructions issued to naval commanders of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, Japan, Spain, Germany and France from 1888 to the beginning of the present war shows that search in port was not contemplated by the government of any of these countries. On the contrary, the context of the respective instructions shows that search at sea was the procedure expected to be followed by the commanders. All of these instructions impress upon the naval officers the necessity of acting with the utmost moderation—and in some cases commanders are specifically instructed—in exercising the right of visit and search, to avoid undue deviation of the vessel from her course.

5. An examination of the opinions of the most eminent text writers on the laws of nations shows that they give practically no consideration to the question of search in port, outside of examination in the course of regular prize court proceedings.

6. The assertion by his majesty's government that the position of the United States in relation to search at sea is inconsistent with its practice during the American civil war is based upon a misconception. Irregularities there may have been at the beginning of that war, but a careful search of the records of this government as to the practice of its commanders shows conclusively that there were no instances when vessels were brought into port for search prior to instituting prize court proceedings or that captures were made upon other grounds than, in the words of the American note of Nov. 7, 1914, "evidence found on the ship under investigation and not upon circumstances ascertained from external sources." A copy of the instruction issued to American naval officers on Aug. 18, 1862, for their guidance during the civil war, is appended, not printed.

7. The British contention that "modern conditions" justify bringing vessels into port for search is based upon the size and seaworthiness of modern carriers of commerce and the difficulty of uncovering the real transaction in the intricate trade operations of the present day. It is believed that commercial transactions of the present time, hampered as they are by censorship of telegraph and postal communication on the part of belligerents, are essentially no more complex and disguised than in the wars of recent years, during which the practice of obtaining evidence in port to determine whether a vessel should be held for prize proceedings was not adopted. The effect of the size and seaworthiness of merchant vessels upon their search at sea has been submitted to a board of naval experts, which reports that:

"At no period in history has it been considered necessary to remove every package of a ship's cargo to establish the character and nature of her trade or the service on which she is bound, nor is such removal necessary. * * *

"The facilities for boarding and inspection of modern ships are in fact greater than in former times, and no difference, so far as the necessities of the case are concerned, can be seen between the search of a ship of 1,000 and one of 20,000 tons—except possibly a difference in time—for the purpose of establishing fully the character of her cargo and the nature of her service and destination. * * * This method would be a direct aid to the belligerents concerned, in that it would release a belligerent vessel overhauling the neutral from its duty of search and set it free for further belligerent operations."

8. Turning to the character and sufficiency of the evidence of the contraband nature of shipments to warrant the detention of a suspected vessel or cargo for prize proceedings, it will be recalled that when a vessel is brought in for adjudication courts of prize have heretofore been bound by well established and long settled practice to consider at the first hearing only the ship's papers and documents, and the goods found on board, together with the written replies of the officers and seamen to standing interrogatories taken under oath, alone and separately, as soon as possible and without communication with or instruction by counsel, in order to avoid possibility of corruption and fraud.

9. Additional evidence was not allowed to be introduced except upon an order of the court for "further proof," and then only after the cause had been fully heard upon the facts already in evidence or when this evidence furnished a ground for prosecuting the inquiry further. This was the practice of the United States courts during the war of 1812, the American civil war and the Spanish-American war, as is evidenced by the reported decisions of those courts, and has been the practice of the British prize courts for over a century. This practice has been changed by the British prize court rules adopted for the present war by the order in council of Aug. 5. Under these new rules there is no longer a "first hearing" on the evidence derived from the ship, and the prize court is no longer precluded from receiving extrinsic evidence for which a suggestion has not been laid in the preparatory evidence. The result is, as pointed out above, that innocent vessels or cargoes are now seized and detained on mere suspicion while efforts are made to obtain evidence from extraneous sources to justify the detention and the commencement of prize proceedings. The effect of this new procedure is to subject traders to risk of loss, delay and expense so great and so burdensome as practically to destroy much of the export trade of the United States to neutral countries of Europe.

10. In order to place the responsibility for the delays of vessels and cargoes upon American claimants, the order in council of Oct. 29, 1914, as pointed out in the British note of Feb. 10, seeks to place the burden of proof as to the noncontraband character of the goods upon the claimant in cases where the goods are consigned "to order" or the consignee is not named or the consignee is within enemy territory. Without admitting that the onus probandi can rightfully be made to rest upon the claimant in these cases, it is sufficient for the purposes of this note to point out that the three classes of cases indicated in the order in council of Oct. 29 apply to only a few of the many seizures or detentions which have actually been made by British authorities.

11. The British contention that in the American civil war the captor was allowed to establish enemy destination by "all the evidence at his disposal," citing the Bermuda case (3 Wallace, 615), is not borne out by the facts of that case. The case of the Bermuda was one of "further proof," a proceeding not to determine whether the vessel should be detained and placed in a prize court, but whether the vessel, having been placed in prize court, should be restored or condemned. The same ruling was made in the case of the Sir William Peel (5 Wallace, 517). These cases, therefore, cannot be properly cited as supporting the course of a British captor in taking a vessel into port, there to obtain extrinsic evidence to justify him in detaining the vessel for prize proceedings.

12. The further contention that the greatly increased imports of neutral countries, adjoining Great Britain's enemies, raises a presumption that certain commodities, such as cotton, rubber and others more or less useful for military purposes, though destined for those countries, are intended for re-exportation to the belligerents who cannot import them directly, and that this fact justifies the detention for the purpose of examination of all vessels bound for the ports of those neutral countries, notwithstanding the fact that most of the articles of trade have been placed on the embargo lists of those countries, cannot be accepted as laying down a just or legal rule of evidence. Such a presumption is too remote from the facts and offers too great opportunity for abuse by the belligerent, who could, if the rule were adopted, entirely ignore neutral rights on the high seas and prey with impunity upon neutral commerce. To such a rule of legal presumption this government cannot accede, as it is opposed to the fundamental principles of justice which are the foundation of the jurisprudence of the United States and Great Britain.

13. Before passing from the discussion of this contention as to the presumption raised by increased importations to neutral countries, this government directs attention to the fact that his majesty's government admit that the British exports to those countries have also materially increased since the present war began. Thus Great Britain concededly shares in creating a condition which is relied upon as a sufficient ground to justify the interception of American goods destined to neutral European ports. If British exports to those ports should be still further increased, it is obvious that, under the rule of evidence contended for by the British government, the presumption of enemy destination could be applied to a greater number of American cargoes, and American trade would suffer to the extent that British trade benefited by the increase. Great Britain cannot expect the United States to submit to such manifest injustice or to permit the rights of its citizens to be so seriously impaired.

14. When goods are clearly intended to become incorporated in the mass of merchandise for sale in a neutral country, it is an unwarranted and inquisitorial proceeding to detain shipments for examination as to whether those goods are ultimately destined for the enemy's country or use. Whatever may be the conjectural conclusions to be drawn from trade statistics, which, when stated by value, are of uncertain evidence as to quantity, the United States maintains the right to sell goods into the general stock of a neutral country, and denounces as illegal and unjustifiable any attempt of a belligerent to interfere with that right on the ground that it suspects that the previous supply of such goods in the neutral country, which the imports renew or replace, has been sold to an enemy. That is a matter with which the neutral vendor has no concern and which can in no way affect his rights of trade. Moreover, even if goods listed as conditional contraband are destined to an enemy country through a neutral country, that fact is not in itself sufficient to justify their seizure.

15. In view of these considerations, the United States, reiterating its position in this matter, has no other course but to contest seizures of vessels at sea upon conjectural suspicion and the practice of bringing them into port for the purpose, by search or otherwise, of obtaining evidence, for the purpose of justifying prize proceedings, of the carriage of contraband or of breaches of the order in council of March 11. Relying upon the regard of the British government for the principle of justice so frequently and uniformly manifested prior to the present war, this government anticipates that the British government will instruct their officers to refrain from these vexatious and illegal practices,

16. Second, The government of the United States further desires to direct particular attention to the so called "blockade" measures imposed by the order in council of March 11. The British note of July 23, 1915, appears to confirm the intention indicated in the note of March 15, 1915, to establish a blockade so extensive as to prohibit trade with Germany or Austria-Hungary, even through the ports of neutral countries adjacent to them. Great Britain, however, admits that it should not, and gives assurances that it will not, interfere with trade with the countries contiguous to the territories of the enemies of Great Britain. Nevertheless, after over six months' application of the "blockade" order, the experience of American citizens has convinced the government of the United States that Great Britain has been unsuccessful in her efforts to distinguish between enemy and neutral trade. Arrangements have been made to create in these neutral countries special consignees, or consignee corporations, with power to refuse shipments and to determine when the state of the country's resources requires the importation of new commodities. American commercial interests are hampered by the intricacies of these arrangements, and many American citizens justly complain that their bona fide trade with neutral countries is greatly reduced as a consequence, while others assert that their neutral trade, which amounted annually to a large sum, has been entirely interrupted.

17. It makes this practice even more harassing to neutral traders that the British authorities require a consignor to prove that his shipments are not bound to an enemy of Great Britain, even when the articles are on the embargo list of the neutral country to which they are destined, and that notwithstanding the assertion in the last British note that interference with such trade by a belligerent can only take place "provided, of course, that he (the belligerent) can establish" that the commerce is with the enemy.

18. While the United States government was at first inclined to view with leniency the British measures which were termed in the correspondence but not in the order in council of March 11 a "blockade," because of the assurances of the British government that inconvenience to neutral trade would be minimized by the discretion left to the courts in the application of the order in council and by the instructions which it was said would be issued to the administrative and other authorities having to do with the execution of the so called "blockade" measures, this government is now forced to the realization that its expectations, which were fully set forth in its note of March 30, were based on a misconception of the intentions of the British government. Desiring to avoid controversy and in the expectation that the administration of the order in council would conform to the established rules of international law, this government has until now reserved the question of the actual validity of the order in council of March 11, in so far as it is considered by the government of Great Britain to establish a blockade within the meaning of that term as understood in the law and the practice of nations; but in the circumstances now developed it feels that it can no longer permit the validity of the alleged blockade to remain unchallenged.

19. The declaration of Paris in 1856, which has been universally recognized as correctly stating the rule of international law as to blockade, expressly declares that "blockades, in order to be binding, must be effective; that is to say, maintained by force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy." The effectiveness of a blockade is manifestly a question of fact. It is common knowledge that the German coasts are open to trade with the Scandinavian countries and that German naval vessels cruise both in the North sea and the Baltic and seize and bring into German ports neutral vessels bound for Scandinavian and Danish ports. Furthermore, from the recent placing of cotton on the British list of contraband of war, it appears that the British government have themselves been forced to the conclusion that the blockade is ineffective to prevent shipments of cotton from reaching their enemies, or else that they are doubtful as to the legality of the form of blockade which they have sought to maintain.

20. Moreover, it is an essential principle which has been universally accepted that a blockade must apply impartially to the ships of all nations. This was set forth in the declaration of London, is found in the prize rules of Germany, France and Japan, and has long been admitted as a basic principle of the law of blockade. This principle, however, is not applied in the present British "blockade," for, as above indicated, German ports are notoriously open to traffic with the ports of Denmark, Norway and Sweden. So strictly has this principle been enforced in the past that in the Crimean war the judicial committee of the privy council on appeal laid down that if belligerents themselves trade with blockaded ports they cannot be regarded as effectively blockaded. (The Franciska, Moore, P. C., 56.) This decision has special significance at the present time, since it is a matter of common knowledge that Great Britain exports and re-exports large quantities of merchandise to Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland, whose ports, far as American commerce is concerned, she regards as blockaded. In fact, the British note of Aug. 13 itself indicates that the British exports of many articles, such as cotton, lubricating oil, tobacco, cocoa, coffee, rice, wheat flour, barley, spices, tea, copra, etc., to these countries have greatly exceeded the British exports of the same articles for the corresponding period of 1914. The note also shows that there has been an important British trade with these countries in many other articles, such as machinery, beef, butter, cotton waste, etc.

21. Finally, there is no better settled principle of the law of nations than that which forbids the blockade of neutral ports in time of war. The declaration of London, though not regarded as binding upon the signatories because not ratified by them, has been expressly adopted by the British government without modification as to blockade in the British order in council of Oct. 29, 1914. Article XVIII. of the declaration declares specifically that "the blockading forces must not bar access to neutral ports or coasts." This is, in the opinion of this government, a correct statement of the universally accepted law as it exists to-day and as it existed prior to the declaration of London. The meaning of this statement is elucidated by Mr. Renault in the report of the drafting committee upon the convention, in which he states:

"This rule has been thought necessary the better to protect the commercial interests of neutral countries; it completes article I., according to which a blockade must not extend beyond the ports and coasts of the enemy, which implies that, as it is an operation of war, it must not be directed against a neutral port, in spite of the importance to a belligerent of the part played by that port in supplying his adversary."

As the conference assembled at London upon the invitation of the British government, it is important to recall the instruction of Sir Edward Grey to the British delegates, "settling out the views of his majesty's government," founded on the decisions of the British courts," in which he says:

"A blockade must be confined to the ports and coast of the enemy, but it may be instituted of one port or of several ports or of the whole of the seaboard of the enemy. It may be instituted to prevent the ingress only or egress only, or both."

He added:

"Where the ship does not intend to proceed to the blockaded port, the fact that goods on board are to be sent on by sea or by inland transport is no ground for condemnation."

In support of this announcement, Sir Edward Grey referred to several decisions of British prize courts, among which an early one of 1801 held that goods shipped from London to Emden, thence inland or by canal to Amsterdam, then blockaded by sea, were not subject to condemnation for breach of blockade. (Jonge Pieter, 4 C. R., 79). This has been the rule for a century, so that it is scarcely necessary to recall that the Matamoros cases, well known to the British government, support the same rule, that neutral ports may not be blockaded, though "trade with unrestricted inland commerce between such a port and the enemy's territory impairs undoubtedly, and very seriously impairs, the value of a blockade of the enemy's coast."

22. Without mentioning the other customary elements of a regularly imposed blockade, such as notification of the particular coast line involved, the imposition of the penalty of confiscation, etc., which are lacking in the present British "blockade" policy, it need only be pointed out that, measured by the three universally conceded tests above set forth, the present British measures cannot be regarded as constituting a blockade in law, in practice or in effect.

23. It is incumbent upon the United States government, therefore, to give the British government notice that the blockade, which they claim to have instituted under the order in council of March 11, cannot be recognized as a legal blockade by the United States.

24. Since the government of Great Britain has laid much emphasis on the ruling of the Supreme court of the United States in the Springbok case, that goods of contraband character seized while going to the neutral port of Nassau, though actually bound for the blockaded ports of the south, were subject to condemnation. It is not inappropriate to direct attention to the British view of this case in England prior to the present war, as expressed by Sir Edward Grey in his instructions to the British delegates to the London conference in 1905:

"It is exceedingly doubtful whether the decision of the Supreme court was in reality meant to cover a case of blockade running in which no question of contraband arose. Certainly if such was the intention the decision would pro tanto be in conflict with the practice of the British courts. His majesty's government sees no need for departing from that practice, and you should endeavor to obtain general recognition of its correctness."

It may be pointed out also that the circumstances surrounding the Springbok case were essentially different from those of the present day to which the rule laid down in that case is sought to be applied. When the Springbok case arose the ports of the confederate states were effectively blockaded by the naval forces of the United States, though no neutral ports were closed, and a continuous voyage through a neutral port required an all-sea voyage terminating in an attempt to pass the blockading squadron.

25. Undoubtedly it appears to the position of Great Britain that if, as the United States alleges, American citizens or American interests are directly and adversely affected by the British policies of contraband and nonintercourse, resulting in interference with ships and cargoes, they should seek redress in the prize courts which the British government have established, and that, pending the exhaustion of such legal remedies with the result of a denial of justice, the British government "cannot continue to deal through the diplomatic channels with the individual cases."

26. It is declared that this was the course followed by the United States during the American civil war and the Spanish war, and that both countries have supported the practice by allowing their prize court decisions, when shown to be unjust or inadequate, to be reviewed by an international tribunal, as was done under the treaties of 1794 and 1871. The ground upon which this contention is put forth, and the results which would follow if the course of procedure suggested were accepted, give the impression that his majesty's government do not rely upon its soundness or strength. Nevertheless, since it has been advanced, I cannot refrain from presenting certain considerations which will show that the proposed course embodies the form rather than the substance of redress. The cases which the British government would have claimants present to their prize courts are essentially different from cases arising wholly within the jurisdiction of a foreign country. They result from acts committed by the British naval authorities upon the high seas, where the jurisdiction over neutral vessels is acquired solely by international law. Vessels of foreign nationality, flying a neutral flag and finding their protection in the country of that flag are seized without facts warranting a reasonable suspicion that they are destined to blockaded ports, of the enemy or that their cargoes are contraband, although the possession of such facts is, by international law, essential to render a seizure legal. The officers appear to find their justification in the orders in council and regulations of the British government, in spite of the fact that in many of the present cases the orders in council and the regulations for their enforcement at themselves complained of by claimants as contrary to international law. Yet the very courts which, it is said, are to dispense justice to dissatisfied claimants are bound by the orders in council. This is unmistakably indicated to be the case in the British note of July 31, which states that—

"British prize courts 'according to the ancient form of commission under which they sit are to determine cases according to the course of admiralty and the law of nations and the statutes, rules and regulations for the time being in force in that behalf.'"

This principle, the note adds, has recently been announced and adhered to by the British prize court in the case of the Zamora. It is manifest, therefore, that if prize courts are bound by the laws and regulations under which seizures and detentions are made, and which claimants allege are in contravention of the law of nations, those courts are powerless to pass upon the real ground of complaint or to give redress for wrongs of this nature. Nevertheless, it is seriously suggested that claimants are free to request the prize court to rule upon a claim of conflict between an order in council and a rule of international law. How can a tribunal fettered in its jurisdiction and procedure by municipal enactments declare itself emancipated from their restrictions and at liberty to apply the rules of international law with freedom? The very laws and regulations which bind the court are now matters of dispute between the government of the United States and that of his Britannic majesty. If Great Britain followed, as she declares that she did, the course of first referring claimants to local remedies in cases arising out of American wars, it is presumed that she did so because of her knowledge or understanding that the United States had not sought to limit the jurisdiction of its courts of prize by instructions and regulations violative of the law and practice of nations, or open to such objection.

27. The British note of Feb. 10 states that the British government in the American civil war "in spite of remonstrances from many quarters, placed full reliance on the American prize courts to grant redress to the parties interested in cases of alleged wrongful capture by American ships of war and put forward no claim until the opportunity for redress in those courts had been exhausted."

The government of the United States recalls that during the progress of that war Great Britain in several instances demanded through diplomatic channels damages for seizures and detentions of British ships alleged to have been made without legal justification. Among these may be mentioned the cases of the Magicienne, the Don Jose, the Labuan and the Saxon. Two of these cases were at the time the demands were made before American prize courts for adjudication. It is understood also that during the Boer war, when British authorities seized the German vessels the Hertzog, the General and the Bundesrath and released them without prize proceedings, compensation for damages suffered was arranged through diplomatic channels.

28. There is, furthermore, a real and far-reaching injury for which prize courts offer no means of reparation. It is the disastrous effect of the methods of the allied governments upon the general right of the United States to enjoy its international trade free from unusual and arbitrary limitations imposed by belligerent nations. Unwarranted delay and expense in bringing vessels into port or search and investigation upon mere suspicion has a deterrent effect upon trade ventures, however lawful they may be, which cannot be adequately measured in damages. The menace of interference with legal commerce causes vessels to be withdrawn from their usual trade routes and insurance on vessels and cargoes to be refused, while exporters for the same reason are unable or unwilling to send their goods to foreign markets, and importers dare not buy commodities abroad because of fear of their illegal seizure or because they are unable to procure transportation. For such injuries there can be no remedy through the medium courts established to adjust claims for goods detained or condemned. For specific injuries suffered by private interests prize courts, if they are free to apply the law of nations, might mete out an adequate indemnity, but for the injury to the trade of a nation by the menace of unwarranted interference with its lawful and established pursuit there can manifestly be found no remedy in the prize courts of Great Britain, to which United States citizens are referred for redress.

29. There is another ground why American citizens cannot submit their wrongs arising out of undue detentions and seizures to British prize courts for reparation which I cannot pass over unnoticed. It is the manner in which British courts obtain jurisdiction of such cases. The jurisdiction over merchant vessels on the high seas is that of the nation whose flag it rightfully flies. This is a principle of the law and practice of nations fundamental to the freedom of the high seas. Municipal enactments of a belligerent power cannot confer jurisdiction over or establish rules of evidence governing the legality of seizures of vessels of neutral nationality on the high seas. International law alone controls the exercise of the belligerent right to seize and detain such vessels. Municipal laws and regulations in violation of the international rights of another nation cannot be extended to the vessels of the latter on the high seas so as to justify a belligerent nation bringing them into its ports, and, having illegally brought them within its territorial jurisdiction, compelling them to submit to the domestic laws and regulations of that nation. Jurisdiction obtained in such a manner is contrary to those principles of justice and equity which all nations should respect. Such practice should invalidate any disposition by a municipal court of property thus brought before it. The government of the United States has, therefore, viewed with surprise and concern the attempt of his majesty's government to confer upon the British prize courts jurisdiction by this illegal exercise of force in order that these courts may apply to vessels and cargoes of neutral nationalities, seized on the high seas, municipal laws and orders which can only rightfully be enforceable within the territorial waters of Great Britain, or against vessels of British nationality when on the high seas.

30. In these circumstances the United States government feels that it cannot reasonably be expected to advise its citizens to seek redress before tribunals which are, in its opinion, unauthorized by the unrestricted application of international law to grant reparation, nor to refrain from presenting their claims directly to the British government through diplomatic channels.

31. This government is advised that vessels and cargoes brought in for examination prior to prize proceedings are released only upon condition that costs and expenses incurred in the course of such unwarranted procedure, such as pillotage, wharfage, demurrage, harbor dues, warehouseage, unloading costs, etc., be paid by the claimants or on condition that they sign a waiver of right to bring subsequent claims against the British government for these exactions. This government is loath to believe that such ungenerous treatment will continue to be accorded American citizens by the government of his Britannic majesty, but in order that the position of the United States government may be clearly understood, I take this opportunity to inform your excellency that this government denies that the charges incident to such detentions are rightfully imposed upon innocent trade or that any waiver of indemnity exacted from American citizens under such conditions of dress can preclude them from obtaining redress through diplomatic channels or by whatever other means may be open to them.

32. Before closing this note, in which frequent reference is made to contraband traffic and contraband articles, it is necessary, in order to avoid possible misconception, that it should be clearly understood by his majesty's government that there is no intention in this discussion to commit the government of the United States to a policy of waiving any objections which it may entertain as to the propriety and right of the British government to include in their list of contraband of war certain articles which have been so included. The United States government reserves the right to make this matter the subject of a communication to his majesty's government at a later day.

33. I believe it has been conclusively shown that the methods sought to be employed by Great Britain to obtain and use evidence of enemy destination of cargoes bound for neutral ports and to impose a contraband character upon such cargoes are without justification; that the blockade upon which such methods are partly founded, is ineffective, illegal and indefensible; that the judicial procedure offered as a means of reparation for an international injury is inherently defective for the purpose; and that in many cases jurisdiction is asserted in violation of the law of nations. The United States, therefore, cannot submit to the curtailment of its neutral rights by these measures, which are admittedly retaliatory, and therefore illegal, in conception and in nature, and intended to punish the enemies of Great Britain for alleged illegalities on their part. The United States might not be in a position to object to them if its interests and the interests of all neutrals were unaffected by them, but, being affected, it cannot with complacency suffer further subordination of its rights and interests to the plea that the exceptional geographic position of the enemies of Great Britain requires or justifies oppressive and illegal practices.

34. The government of the United States desires, therefore, to impress most earnestly upon his majesty's government that it must insist that the relations between it and his majesty's government be governed not by a policy of expediency, but by the established rules of international conduct upon which Great Britain in the past has held the United States to account when the latter nation was a belligerent engaged in a struggle for national existence. It is of the highest importance to neutrals not only of the present day but of the future that the principles of international right be maintained unimpaired.

35. This task of championing the integrity of neutral rights, which have received the sanction of the civilized world against the lawless conduct of belligerents arising out of the bitterness of the great conflict which is now wasting the countries of Europe, the United States unhesitatingly assumes and to the accomplishment of that task it will devote its energies, exercising always that impartiality which from the outbreak of the war it has sought to exercise in its relations with the warring nations.

I inclose as supplements to this instruction the United States navy order of Aug. 18, 1862, and a statement regarding vessels detained by British authorities. [Not printed.] These two documents should be transmitted as inclosures in your note to Sir Edward Grey.

I am, etc., ROBERT LANSING.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, April 24, 1916.

Sir: I have the honor, in obedience to instructions received from Sir Edward Grey, his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, to transmit to you herewith a memorandum embodying the reply to the representations of your government in regard to restrictions on trade, which were communicated to Sir Edward Grey in Mr. Page's note of Nov. 5 last, in pursuance to your instructions dated Oct. 21.

I have, etc., CECIL SPRING RICE.

(Inclosure.)

Memorandum.

The communication addressed by the United States ambassador in London to Sir E. Grey on the 5th November, 1915, has received the careful attention of his majesty's government, in consultation with their allies the French government, and his majesty's government have now the honor to make the following reply:

2. The first section (paragraphs 3-15) of the United States note relates to cargoes detained by the British authorities in order to prevent them from reaching an enemy destination, and the complaint of the United States government is summarized in paragraph 33 to the effect that the methods sought to be employed by Great Britain to obtain and use evidence of enemy destination of cargoes bound for neutral ports and to impose a contraband character upon such cargoes are without justification.

3. The wording of this summary suggests that the basis of the complaint of the United States government is not so much that the shipments intercepted by the naval forces were really intended for use in the neutral countries to which they were dispatched, as that the dispatch of goods to the enemy countries has been frustrated by methods which have not been employed by belligerent nations in the past. It would seem to be a fair reply to such a contention that new devices for dispatching goods to the enemy must be met by new methods of applying the fundamental and acknowledged principle of the right to intercept such trade.

4. The question whether the exercise of the right of search can be restricted to search at sea was dealt with in Sir E. Grey's note of the 7th January, 1915, and his majesty's government would again draw attention to the facts that information has constantly reached them of attempts to conceal contraband intended for the enemy in innocent packages, and that these attempts can only be frustrated by examination of the ship and cargo in port. Similarly, in Sir E. Grey's note of the 10th February, 1915, it was pointed out that the size of modern steamships, and their capacity to navigate the waters where the allied patrols have to operate, whatever the conditions of the weather, frequently render it a matter of extreme danger, if not of impossibility, even to board the vessels unless they are taken into calm water for the purpose. It is unnecessary to repeat what was said in that note. There is nothing that his majesty's government could withdraw or that the experience of the officers of the allied fleets has tended to show was inaccurate.

5. When visit and search at sea are possible, and when a search can be made there which is sufficient to secure belligerent rights, it may be admitted that it would be an unreasonable hardship on merchant vessels to compel them to come into port, and it may well be believed that maritime nations have hesitated to modify the instructions to their naval officers that it is at sea that these operations should be carried out, and that undue deviation of the vessel from her course must be avoided. That, however, does not affect the fact that it would be impossible under the conditions of modern warfare to confine the rights of visit and search to an examination of the ship at the place where she is encountered without surrendering a fundamental belligerent right.

6. The effect of the size and seaworthiness of merchant vessels upon their search at sea is essentially a technical question, and accordingly his majesty's government have thought it well to submit the report of the board of naval experts, quoted by the United States ambassador in paragraph 7 of this note, to Admiral Sir John Jellicoe for his observation. The unique experience which this officer has gained as the result of more than eighteen months in command of the grand fleet renders his opinion of peculiar value. His report is as follows:

"It is undoubtedly the case that the size of modern vessels is one of the factors which renders search at sea far more difficult than in the days of smaller vessels. So far as I know, it has never been contended that it is necessary to remove every package of a ship's cargo to establish the character and nature of her trade, etc.; but it must be obvious that the larger the vessel and the greater the amount of cargo, the more difficult does examination at sea become, because more packages must be removed.

This difficulty is much enhanced by the practice of concealing contraband in bales of hay and passengers' luggage, casks, etc., and this procedure, which has undoubtedly been carried out, necessitates the actual removal of a good deal of cargo for examination in suspected cases. This removal cannot be carried out at sea, except in the very finest weather.

"Further, in a large ship the greater bulk of the cargo renders it easier to conceal contraband, especially such valuable metals as nickel, quantities of which can easily be stowed in places other than the holds of a large ship.

"I entirely dispute the contention, therefore, advanced in the American note, that there is no difference between the search of a ship of 1,000 tons and one of 20,000 tons. I am sure that the fallacy of the statement must be apparent to anyone who has ever carried out such a search at sea.

"There are other facts, however, which render it necessary to bring vessels into port for search. The most important is the manner in which those in command of German submarines, in entire disregard of international law and of their own prize regulations, attack and sink merchant vessels on the high seas, neutral as well as British, without visiting the ship and therefore without any examination of the cargo. This procedure renders it unsafe for a neutral vessel which is being examined by officers from a British ship to remain stopped on the high seas, and it is therefore in the interests of the neutrals themselves that the examination should be conducted in port.

"The German practice of misusing United States passports in order to procure a safe conduct for military persons and agents of enemy nationality makes it necessary to examine closely all suspected persons, and to do this effectively necessitates bringing the ship into harbor."

7. Sir John Jellicoe goes on to say:

"The difference between the British and the German procedure is that we have acted in the way which causes the least discomfort to neutrals. Instead of sinking neutral ships engaged in trade with the enemy, as the Germans have done in so many cases in direct contravention of article 113 of their own naval prize regulations, 1899, in which it is laid down that the commander is only justified in destroying a neutral ship which has been captured if—

"(a) She is liable to condemnation, and

"(b) The bringing in might expose the warship to danger or imperil the success of the operations in which she is engaged at the time—we examine them, giving as little inconvenience as modern naval conditions will allow, sending them into port only where this becomes necessary.

"It must be remembered, however, that it is not the allies alone who send a percentage of neutral vessels into port for examination, for it is common knowledge that German naval vessels, as stated in paragraph 19 of the American note, 'seize and bring into German ports neutral vessels bound for Scandinavian and Danish ports.'

"As cases in point, the interception by the Germans of the American oil tankers Llama and Platuria in August last may be mentioned. Both were bound to America from Sweden and were taken into Swinemunde for examination."

8. The French ministry of marine shares the views expressed by Sir J. Jellicoe on the question of search at sea and has added the following statement:

"La pratique navale, telle qu'elle existait autrefois et consistait a visiter les navires en mer, methode que nous a leguee l'ancienne marine, ne s'adapte plus aux conditions de la navigation actuelle. Les Americains ont pressenti son insuffisance et ont prevu la necessite de lui en substituer une plus efficace. Dans les instructions donnees par le departement de la marine americaine du 20 juin, 1898, aux croiseurs des Etats-Unis, on trouve deja la prescription suivante:

"Si ces derniers [les papiers de bord] indiquent de la contrebande de guerre, le navire devra etre saisi; sinon, il sera laisse libre, a moins qu'en raison de puissants motifs de suspicion, une visite plus minutieuse paraisse devoir etre exee."

"Toute methode doit se modifier en tenant compte des transformations subies par le materiel que les hommes ont a leur disposition, a la condition de rester une methode humaine et civilisee.

"L'amirauté française estime qu'aujourd'hui un navire, pour etre visite, doit etre deroute sur un port toutes les fois que l'etat de la mer, la nature, le poids, le volume, l'armement de la cargaison suspecte, en meme temps que l'obscurite et l'absence de precision des papiers de bord, rendent la visite en mer pratiquement impossible ou dangereuse pour le navire visite."

"Au contraire, lorsque les circonstances inverses existent, la visite doit etre faite en mer, 'le deroutement est egalement necessaire et justifie, lorsque, le navire neutre entrant dans la zone ou le voisinage des hostilities, (1) il importe, dans l'interet meme du navire neutre, d'eviter a ce dernier une serie d'arrets et de visites successives et de faire etablir, un fois pour tous, son caractere inoffensif et de lui permettre ainsi de continuer librement sa route sans etre moleste; et (2) le belligerant, dans son droit de legitime defense, est fonde a exercer une surveillance particuliere sur les navires inconnus qui circulent dans ces parages."

Unauthorized Translation of Paragraph 8 of the British Memorandum.

"Naval practice, as it formerly existed, consisting in searching ships on the high seas, a method handed down to us by the old navy, is no longer adaptable to the conditions of navigation at the present day. Americans have anticipated its insufficiency and have foreseen the necessity of substituting some more effective method. In the instruction issued by the American navy department under date of June 20, 1898, to the cruisers of the United States, the following order is found (clause 13):

"If the latter (the ship's papers) show contraband of war, the ship should be seized; if not, she should be set free unless by reason of strong grounds of suspicion a further search should seem to be requisite."

"Every method must be modified having regard to the modifications of material which men have at their disposal, on condition that the method remains humane and civilized.

"The French admiralty considers that to-day a ship, in order to be searched, should be brought to a port whenever the state of the sea, the nature, weight, volume and stowage of the suspected cargo, as well as the obscurity and lack of precision of the ship's papers, render search at sea practically impossible or dangerous for the ship searched.

"On the other hand, when the contrary cir-circumstances exist, the search should be made at sea.

"Bringing the ship into port is also necessary and justified when, the neutral vessel having entered the zone or vicinity of hostilities, (1) it is a question, in the interests of the neutral ship herself, of avoiding for the latter a series of stoppages and successive visits and of establishing once for all her innocent character and of permitting her thus to continue her voyage freely and without being molested; and (2) the belligerent, within his rights of legitimate defense, is entitled to exercise special vigilance over unknown ships which circulate in these waters."

9. The question of the locality of the search is, however, one of secondary importance. In the view of his majesty's government the right of a belligerent to intercept contraband on its way to his enemy is fundamental and incontestable, and ought not to be restricted to intercepting contraband which happens to be accompanied on board the ship by proof sufficient to condemn it. What is essential is to determine whether or not the goods were on their way to the enemy. If they were, a belligerent is entitled to detain them, and having regard to the nature of the struggle in which the allies are engaged they are compelled to take the most effectual steps to exercise that right.

10. The United States note then passes to the subject of the procedure in the prize courts, and maintains that courts of prize have hitherto been bound, by well-established and long-settled practice, to consider at the first hearing only the ship's papers and documents and the answers to the standing interrogatories, and to exclude all other evidence unless and until an order has been made for "further proof." Attention is drawn to the fact that the above practice, which had been followed by the British prize courts for over a century, and also by the prize courts of the United States, was changed by the prize court rules issued by his majesty's government at the outbreak of the present war. Upon this matter his majesty's government have to point out that they recognized some years ago that modern conditions had rendered the old rules obsolete, and new rules had been prepared under the guidance and supervision of the late Lord Gorell, whose experience as president of the admiralty division of the high court of justice rendered him well qualified to deal with the subject. Twenty months' experience of the working of the new rules in the prize court has served to show the utility of the changes.

11. It may further be pointed out that the practice and procedure adopted in prize courts are not settled or regulated by international law, but they are determined by each nation for itself. The procedure described in the United States note was gradually evolved in the British courts, and, though it was adopted by the United States, it has never been followed in the prize courts of France or of any other continental nation, nor does the fact that the United States followed the British practice prevent Great Britain or any other of the allied nations from introducing such changes in the procedure as modern circumstances may call for. International law only requires that the practice in prize courts of the belligerent nation should afford a fair hearing to all claims put forward by neutrals, and should enable the court to arrive at a just conclusion upon the evidence. Subject to that condition, each nation may regulate the practice to be followed in its prize courts. As an instance, the recent Italian decree of 30th May, 1915, may be quoted in article 6 of which it is enacted that the prize court "will draw up rules of procedure for its future guidance." The division of prize court proceedings into two distinct phases, the first hearing and the hearing on further proof, under the early British and American practice, was merely a rule of procedure. Similarly the exclusion of extraneous evidence until the making of an order for further proof was only a rule of procedure. His majesty's government were, therefore, not only at liberty but felt bound to alter these rules so soon as they were advised that the rules were obsolete and might work injustice.

12. The old practice and procedure had become archaic in form and belonged to days long before the modern improvements in legal procedure were developed, days when, for instance, the parties interested were prevented from giving any evidence as witnesses in actions which affected their rights. The alterations in the prize court practice and rules were conceived and made in the spirit of those improvements. The objects with which the old practice was abolished were to prevent delay, to eliminate technicalities, and to enable the parties to prove all the true and material facts, and to place their respective cases fully before the court.

13. Moreover, it must be remembered that the conditions under which goods are conveyed by sea from one country to another have completely changed. In the days when the old rules were developed the ship's papers were a safe and satisfactory guide as to the nature and destination of the cargo. If the ship's papers had not indicated the true object and purpose of the consignment, the consignee would have been uncertain what to do with the goods when they arrived, and the commercial transaction would have been hampered, for there were in those days no fast mails or telegraph cables by which supplementary information could be conveyed. If there were no ship's papers, or if they obviously were not genuine, it was a ground for condemnation. When there was no reason to doubt them, the court could safely take the papers as indicating the real transaction. Nowadays the conditions have changed; the papers may outwardly be perfectly genuine and complete, yet they may have been prepared with the express purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction. These misleading papers would not, however, occasion any difficulty in dealing with the goods on their arrival, because the necessary instructions to the consignee can be conveyed by other means. Consequently the old rule that the papers on board the ship must alone be taken into consideration, and evidence from other sources excluded, is no longer practicable; indeed, the system of attributing to the ship's papers the character of final and conclusive proof upheld in the United States note would encourage shippers of contraband to falsify the papers, as they would thereby insure absolute immunity from capture. It is in the same way due to change of circumstances that the evidence of the master and members of the crew has ceased to be of much importance in the majority of prize cases; they usually now know nothing of the real destination of the cargo they are transporting, and the more skillfully the dispatch of goods with an enemy destination is contrived, the more effectually will it be concealed from those on board.

14. It may be doubted whether any belligerent government would be ready to forego the right of capture of goods on their way to an enemy in every case where such destination was not disclosed by the ship's papers or the evidence of those on board the ship. The difficulty which United States naval officers found even as early as 1862 in complying with the old rule is illustrated by the quotation from Lord Lyons' note of the 22d of April, 1863, in connection with the case of the "Magicienne," one of the cases which is dealt with in the appendix to the note [not printed] in which he drew attention to the habit of the United States cruisers of seizing vessels on the chance that something might possibly be discovered ex post facto which would prevent the captors from being condemned to pay damages.

15. The contention advanced by the United States government in paragraph 9 of their note, that the effect of this new procedure is to subject traders to risk of loss, delay and expense so great and so burdensome as practically to destroy much of the export trade of the United States to neutral countries in Europe, is not borne out by the official statistics published in the United States—nor by the reports of the department of commerce. The first nine months of 1915 may be taken as a period when the war conditions must have been known to all those engaged in commerce in the United States of America, and when any injurious effects of the prize court procedure would have been recognized. During that period the exports from the United States of America to the three Scandinavian countries and Holland, the group of neutral countries whose imports have been most affected by the naval operations of the allies and by the procedure adopted in their prize courts, amounted to $274,037,000 as compared with $126,763,000 in the corresponding period of 1913. It is useless to take into account the corresponding figures of 1914, because of the dislocation of trade caused by the outbreak of war, but taking the pre-war months of 1914, the figures for 1913, 1914 and 1915 were as follows:

1915	234,960,000

16. In the face of such figures it seems impossible to accept the contention that the new prize court procedure in Great Britain has practically destroyed much of the export trade of the United States to neutral countries in Europe, and the inference is suggested that if complaints have been made to the administration of Washington by would-be exporters, they emanated not from persons who desired to engage in genuine commerce with the neutral countries, but from those who desired to dispatch goods to the enemy under cover of a neutral destination, and who found it more difficult to conceal the real facts from the prize courts under the new procedure.

17. At this point it would have been opportune to introduce a reply to the contention that appears at first sight to be advanced in paragraph 13 of the United States note that Great Britain, while interfering with foreign trade, has increased her own with neutral countries adjacent to Germany, but this is rendered unnecessary by the explanation given by Mr. Page at the time that he presented the note, and since confirmed by a statement given out to the press at Washington that no such meaning is to be attributed to the paragraph. Moreover, the subject has been dealt with in the note which Sir E. Grey sent to Mr. Page on the 13th of August, last, and again in the note given to the state department by the British ambassador at Washington on the 27th of December. [Not printed.]

18. The next passage in the United States note (paragraph 14) relates to the principle of non-interference with goods intended to become incorporated in the mass of merchandise for sale in a neutral country, or, as it is more commonly known, with goods intended to be incorporated in the "common stock" of the country. The United States government urge with some force that trade statistics are not by themselves conclusive in establishing an enemy destination, and that such statistics require careful scrutiny. On the other hand, the mere fact that goods, no matter of what description or in what quantities, are ostensibly destined to form part of the common stock of a neutral country cannot be regarded as sufficient evidence to prove their innocence or to justify the assertion that any attempt to raise questions as to their ulterior destination is unwarranted and inquisitorial. It is a matter of common knowledge that large quantities of supplies have since the war broke out passed to our enemy through neutral ports. It was pointed out in Sir E. Grey's note of the 17th July, 1915, that it would be mere affectation to regard some of those ports as offering facilities only for the commerce of the neutral country in which they are situated. They have, in fact, been the main avenues through which supplies have reached the enemy from all parts of the world. In the case of goods consigned to these ports, the ships' papers convey no suggestion as to their ultimate destination, and every device which ingenuity can suggest, or which can be contrived by able and unscrupulous agents, is resorted to for the purpose of giving to carefully organized arrangements for supplying the enemy the appearance of genuine transactions with a neutral country. His majesty's government cannot bring themselves to believe that it is the desire of the United States government that traffic of this kind should be allowed to proceed without hindrance.

19. The question whether goods dispatched to a neutral port were intended to become part of the mass of merchandise for sale in that country is one of fact. Quite apart from the conclusions suggested by the figures, there is a considerable body of evidence that many of the goods which have been shipped to neutral ports during the war were never intended to become part of the common stock of that country, but were earmarked from the beginning for re-export to the enemy countries. If they had been intended to form part of the common stock they would have been available for use in that country; yet at one time in the early days of the allies' efforts to intercept all the commerce of the enemy, when they found it necessary to hold up certain cargoes of cotton on their way to Sweden, it transpired that, though the quays and the warehouses of Gothenburg were congested with cotton, there was none available for the use of the spinners in Sweden.

20. Confirmation of the fact that many of the shipments to neutral ports were never intended to become part of the common stock of the country is also to be found in some of the contracts which have come to light since the policy of intercepting all commodities on their way to or from the enemy country was introduced. One of those which has been disclosed is a contract with a firm in Germany for the sale of no less than 50,000 bales of cotton linters at a price which was about double that which linters were fetching in any other country than Germany. The whole quantity was to be shipped to neutral ports. Various shipments made under this contract have been held up, and in all cases the goods were shipped with papers and under conditions which concealed the enemy destination altogether. Sweden is not in normal times a large importer of cotton linters, and it certainly would not be reasonable to maintain that, because the ship's papers did not disclose this contract of sale or the enemy destination, shipments of linters under this contract should be regarded as intended to become part of the mass of merchandise for sale in Sweden.

21. However sound the principle that goods intended for incorporation in the common stock of a neutral country should not be treated as contraband may be in theory, it is one that can have but little application to the present imports of the Scandinavian countries. The circumstances of a large number of these shipments negative any conclusion that they are bona fide shipments to the importing countries. Many of them are made to persons who are apparently nominees of enemy agents, and who never figured before as importers of such articles. Consignments of meat products are addressed to lightermen and dock laborers. Several thousands of tons of such goods have been found documented for a neutral port and addressed to firms which do not exist there. Large consignments of similar goods were addressed to a baker, to the keeper of a small private hotel, or to a maker of musical instruments. Will it be contended that such imports ought to be regarded as bona fide shipments intended to become part of the common stock of the country?

22. Similarly several of the shipments which the allied naval forces are now obliged to intercept consist of goods for which there is in normal circumstances no sale in the importing country, and it has already been pointed out in a recent decision in the British prize court that the rule about incorporation in the common stock of a neutral country cannot apply to such goods. The same line was taken in some of the decisions in the United States prize courts during the civil war.

23. In the presence of facts such as those indicated above the United States government will, it is believed, agree with his majesty's government that no belligerent could in modern times submit to be bound by a rule that no goods could be seized unless they were accompanied by papers which established their destination to an enemy country, and that all detentions of ships and goods must uniformly be based on proofs obtained at the time of seizure. To press any such theory is tantamount to asking that all trade between neutral ports shall be free, and would thus render nugatory the exercise of sea power and destroy the pressure which the command of the sea enables the allies to impose upon their enemy.

24. It is, of course, inevitable that the exercise of belligerent rights at sea, however reasonably exercised, must inconvenience neutral trade, and great pressure is being put upon the United States government to urge the technical theory that there should be no interference at all with goods passing between neutral ports, and thus to frustrate the measures which the allies have taken to intercept commerce on its way to or from the enemy. It may not be out of place to recall that the position is somewhat similar to that which arose in the United States in the war between the north and the south. All students of international law and of military history are aware that the blockade of the southern states was the most important engine of pressure possessed by the north, and that it was on the point of being rendered ineffective through the use by blockade runners of neutral ports of access. It is well known that the United States government took immediate steps to stop such trade, and that the United States Supreme court extended the doctrine of continuous voyage so as to cover all cases where there was an intention to break the blockade by whatever means, direct or indirect.

25. The configuration of the European coast is such as to render neutral ports the most convenient for the passage of German commerce, and just as it was essential to the United States in the civil war to prevent their blockade from being nullified by the use of neutral ports of access, so it is essential to the allied powers to-day to see that the measures which they are taking to intercept enemy commerce shall not be rendered illusory by the use of similar ports. The instructions issued by Mr. Seward during the civil war show that he regarded the continuance of the blockade against the southern states as absolutely vital, and he repeatedly instructed American representatives abroad to assure foreign governments that while he was fully alive to the great inconveniences caused by the cutting off of the supplies of cotton from Europe, yet he could not, as American secretary of state, "sacrifice the union for cotton." The American representatives in Europe in their published reports again and again expressed the opinion that, whatever might be the policy of the government, the peoples of Europe would never consent to side with the power that upheld slavery against the power which represented freedom. Their opinion was entirely justified by the result, and in fact neither the French nor the English governments took any decided steps toward breaking the blockade, in spite of the tremendous pressure which was brought to bear upon them and the terrible suffering of the cotton operatives of this country. Indeed, President Lincoln himself acknowledged, in a message to the laboring classes of Manchester, his high sense of the spirit of self-sacrifice which they had exhibited in their policy toward America. His majesty's government have, of course, no desire to enter upon any examination of the issues involved in that historic conflict, but no one will question the respect which is due to the determination then shown by the French and British peoples not to range themselves on what they believed to be the side of slavery or consent to action which they held might be fatal to the democratic principle of government, however great the pressure exerted by commercial interests might be.

26. His majesty's government desire to assure the United States government that every effort is being made to distinguish between bona fide neutral commerce and that which is really intended for the enemy. The task is one of exceptional difficulty, and the statistics show that a great volume of imports intended for the enemy must have passed through adjacent neutral countries during the war. As an instance, the imports of lard into Sweden during the year 1915 may be taken. In that year the total import of lard into Sweden from all sources was 9,318 tons, of which no less than 9,029 tons came from the United States. In the three years before the war, 1911-13, the annual average import of the same article was only 883 tons, of which 638 tons came from the United States. It is difficult to believe that the requirements of Sweden in respect of lard, even when every allowance is made for possible diversions of trade due to the war, could suddenly have increased more than tenfold in 1915. The inference, indeed, is irresistible that the greater part of these imports must have had another and an enemy destination.

27. It may readily be conceded that the efforts to intercept enemy commerce passing through neutral countries cannot fail to produce some soreness and dissatisfaction. His majesty's government have, therefore, spared no pains in their endeavor to mitigate the inconvenience which must inevitably be occasioned to neutral traders. In pursuance of this object they are resorting to the policy of ascertaining the total requirements of the country concerned, and intercepting such imports as may be presumed, because they are in excess of these requirements, to form no part of the normal trade of the country, and therefore to be destined for the enemy.

28. The total net imports of a particular commodity by any country in normal times give a satisfactory index to its requirements, and where these are provided for on a generous scale, suitable allowance being made for the commercial dislocation inseparable from a state of war, it is not unfair, after eighteen months of war and in the light of the experience which has now been gained, to invite the prize court to regard with suspicion further consignments of any kind of goods of which the imports have already exceeded a figure ample to satisfy the country's requirements.

29. It ought not to be difficult to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with all parties on the subject, as the official statistics afford information not only as to the quantities of particular commodities required by neutral countries, but also of the sources from which they are usually obtained. Arrangements of this nature will be of great service in removing the friction and misunderstanding which now arise, as it will help the commercial classes in the neutral countries to form an idea of the limits within which their trading operations are not likely to encounter difficulty.

30. The adoption of such a system, although not unattended by difficulty, has been greatly facilitated by agreements made with the organizations which control imports in the neutral countries, as well as by arrangements with some of the shipping lines, and with several of the interests concerned in the import of particular commodities from neutral countries. His majesty's government intend to avail themselves of every opportunity which may present itself, in order to bring about a more extended adoption of this equitable system.

31. Moreover, the fact that a neutral country adjacent to the enemy territory is importing an abnormal quantity of supplies or commodities, of which her usual imports are relatively small, of which the enemy stands in need and which are known to pass from that neutral country to the enemy, is by itself an element of proof on which the prize court would be justified in acting, unless it is rebutted by evidence to the contrary. Hostile destination being a question of fact, the court should take all the relevant circumstances into consideration in arriving at its decision, and there seems to be no reason in principle for limiting the facts at which the court is entitled to look in a case of this kind.

32. The second section of the United States note (paragraphs 16-24) deals with the validity of the measures against enemy commerce which were embodied in the British order in council of the 11th March, 1915, and in the French decree of the 13th March, and maintains that these measures are invalid, because they do not comply with the rules which have been gradually evolved in the past for regulating a blockade of enemy ports, and which were summarized in concrete form in articles 1-21 of the declaration of London.

33. These rules can only be applied to their full extent to a blockade in the sense of the term, as used in the declaration of London. His majesty's government have already pointed out that a blockade which was limited to the direct traffic with enemy ports would in this case have but little, if any, effect on enemy commerce, Germany being so placed geographically that her imports and exports can pass through neutral ports of access as easily as through her own. However, with the spirit of the rules his majesty's government and their allies have loyally complied in the measures they have taken to intercept German imports and exports. Due notice has been given by the allies of the measures they have taken, and goods which were shipped or contracted for before the announcement of the intention of the allies to detain all commerce on its way to or from the enemy countries have been treated with great liberality. The objects with which the usual declaration and notification of blockade are issued have therefore been fully achieved. Again, the effectiveness of the work of the allied fleets under the orders referred to is shown by the small number of vessels which escape the allied patrols. It is doubtful whether there has ever been a blockade where the ships which slipped through bore so small a proportion to those which were intercepted.

34. The measures taken by the allies are aimed at preventing commodities of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany, and not merely at preventing ships from reaching or leaving German ports. His majesty's government do not feel, therefore, that the rules set out in the United States note need be discussed in detail. The basis and the justification of the measures which the allies have taken were dealt with at length in Sir E. Grey's note of the 23d July, and there is no need to repeat what was there said. It need only be added that the rules applicable to a blockade of enemy ports are strictly followed by the allies in cases where they apply, as, for instance, in the blockades which have been declared of the Turkish coast of Asia Minor or of the coast line of German East Africa.

35. Some further comment is perhaps necessary upon the statements made in paragraph 19 of the United States note, where it is said that, because German coasts are open to trade with Scandinavian countries, the measures of the allies fail to comply with the rule that a blockade must be effective. It is no doubt true that commerce from Sweden and Norway reaches German ports in the Baltic in the same way that commerce still passes to and from Germany across the land frontiers of adjacent states, but this fact does not render the measures which France and Great Britain are taking against German trade the less justifiable. Even if these measures were judged with strict reference to the rules applicable to blockades, a standard by which, in their view, the measures of the allies ought not to be judged, it must be remembered that the passage of commerce to a blockaded area across a land frontier or across an inland sea has never been held to interfere with the effectiveness of the blockade. If the right to intercept commerce on its way to or from a belligerent country, even though it may enter that country through a neutral port, be granted, it is difficult to see why the interposition of a few miles of sea as well should make any difference. If the doctrine of continuous voyage may rightly be applied to goods going to Germany through Rotterdam, on what ground can it be contended that it is not equally applicable to goods with a similar destination passing through some Swedish port and across the Baltic or even through neutral waters only? In any case, it must be remembered that the number of ships reaching a blockaded area is not the only test as to whether it is maintained effectively. The best proof of the thoroughness of a blockade is to be found in its results. This is the test which Mr. Seward, in 1863, when secretary of state, maintained should be applied to the blockade of the confederate states. Writing to Mr. Dayton, the United States minister in Paris, on the 8th March, he said: "But the true test of the efficiency of the blockade will be found in its results. Cotton commands a price in Manchester and in Rouen and Lowell four times greater than in New Orleans. * * * Judged by this test of results, I am satisfied that there never was a more effective blockade." Similar language was used in the dispatch to Mr. Adams in London. The great rise in price in Germany of many articles, most necessary to the enemy in the prosecution of the present war, must be well known to the United States government.

36. Attention is drawn in the same paragraph to the fact that cotton has since the measures announced on the 11th March been declared to be contraband, and this is quoted as an admission that the blockade is ineffective to prevent shipments of cotton from reaching the enemy countries. The reason for which cotton was declared to be contraband is quite simple. Goods with an enemy destination are not, under the order in council, subject to condemnation; they are restored to the owner. Evidence accumulated that it was only for military purposes that cotton was being employed in Germany. All cotton was laid under embargo, and its use in the textile factories was prohibited except in very special cases or by military permission. In these circumstances it was right and proper that cotton with an enemy destination should be subjected to condemnation and not merely prevented from passing, and it was for this reason that it was declared to be contraband. The amount of cotton reaching the enemy country has probably not been affected in the least by its being made contraband on the 20th August, as supplies from overseas had been cut off effectually before that date. Even the "Konfektionär," a German technical paper, dealing with the textile industry, admitted in its issue of the 1st July that not a gramme of cotton had found its way into Germany for the preceding four weeks.

37. Before leaving the question of the validity of the measures which France and Great Britain have taken against enemy commerce, reference must be made to the statement made in the 33d paragraph of the United States note that "the curtailment of neutral rights by these measures, which are admittedly retaliatory, and therefore illegal, cannot be admitted." His majesty's government are quite unable to admit the principle that to the extent that these measures are retaliatory they are illegal. It is true that these measures were occasioned and necessitated by the illegal and unjustifiable proclamation issued by the German government on the 4th February, 1915, constituting the waters surrounding Great Britain, including the whole English channel, a "war zone," into which neutral vessels would penetrate at their peril, and in which they were liable to be sunk at sight. This proclamation was accompanied by a memorandum alleging that the violation of international law by Great Britain justified the retaliatory measures of the German government owing to the acquiescence of neutrals in the action of this country. The legitimacy of the use of retaliatory measures was thus admitted by the Germans, although his majesty's government and their allies strongly deny the facts upon which their arguments were based. But although these measures may have been provoked by the illegal conduct of the enemy, they do not, in reality, conflict with any general principle of international law, of humanity, or civilization; they are enforced with consideration against neutral countries, and are therefore juridically sound and valid.

38. The more abstract question of the legitimacy of measures of retaliation adopted by one belligerent against his opponent, but affecting neutrals also, is one of which his majesty's government think the discussion might well be deferred. It is a subject of considerable difficulty and complexity, but his majesty's government are surprised to notice that the government of the States seem to regard all such measures of retaliation in war as illegal if they should incidentally inflict injury upon neutrals. The advantage which any such principle would give to the determined wrongdoer would be so great that his majesty's government cannot conceive that it would commend itself to the conscience of mankind. To take a simple instance, suppose that one belligerent scatters mines on the trade routes so as to impede or destroy the commerce of his enemy—an action which is illegitimate and calculated to inflict injury upon neutrals as well as upon the other belligerents—what is that belligerent to do? Is he precluded from meeting in any way this lawless attack upon him by his enemy? His majesty's government cannot think that he is not entitled by way of retaliation to scatter mines in his turn, even though in so doing he also interferes with neutral rights. Or take an even more extreme case. Suppose that a neutral failed to prevent his territory being made use of by one of the belligerents for warlike purposes, could he object to the other belligerent acting in the same way? It would seem that the true view must be that each belligerent is entitled to insist on being allowed to meet his enemy on terms of equal liberty of action. If one of them is allowed to make an attack upon the other regardless of neutral rights, his opponent must be allowed similar latitude in prosecuting the struggle, nor should he in that case be limited to the adoption of measures precisely identical with those of his opponent.

39. The third section of the United States note deals with the question of the means of redress which are open to United States citizens for any injury or loss which they suffer as the consequence of an unjustifiable exercise of the belligerent rights of the allies. The contention put forward in these paragraphs appears to be that there is no obligation on neutral individuals who maintain they have been damaged by the naval operations of the belligerents to appeal to the prize courts for redress, because the prize courts are fettered by municipal enactments which are binding upon them, whereas the very question which those individuals wish to raise is the validity of such enactments when tested by the canons of international law.

40. These arguments seem to be founded on a misunderstanding of the situation, and to overlook all that was said in Sir E. Grey's note of the 23d July on this subject. The extract there quoted from the decisions given by Lord Stowell shows that in Great Britain the prize court has jurisdiction to pronounce a decision on the very point which the United States note indicates, viz., whether an order or instruction to the naval forces issued by his majesty's government is inconsistent with those principles of international law which the court is bound to apply in deciding cases between captors and claimants, and is entitled, if satisfied that the order is not consistent with those principles, to decline to enforce it. The jurisdiction of the prize court in Great Britain therefore affords every facility to a United States citizen whose goods are detained and dealt with under the order in council of the 11th March to take his case to the prize court and there claim that the order under which the naval authorities have acted is invalid, and that its enforcement entitles him to redress and compensation.

41. In some matters it is true that the prize court is bound by the municipal enactments of its own country. It is the territorial sovereign who sets up the court, and who therefore determines the matters which are incidental to its establishment. His majesty's government have already pointed out that each country determines for itself the procedure which its prize courts shall adopt; but certainly under the British system—and his majesty's government were under the impression that, in this matter, the United States had taken the same course—the substantive law which the court applies as between captor and claimant consists of the rules and principles of international law, and not the municipal legislation of the country. If reference is made to the case of the recovery (6 C. Rob. 341), it will be seen that Lord Stowell refused to enforce in the prize court against a neutral the British navigation laws.

42. Sir E. Grey's note of the 23d July was intended to make this point clear, and so far from having intended to "give the impression that his majesty's government do not rely upon its soundness or strength," his majesty's government wish to lay stress on the fact that the principle that no encroachment should be made upon the jurisdiction and the competence of the prize court is one which they regard as vital.

43. Apart from the cases where a question may arise as to the validity of orders or instructions on which naval action was based, circumstances frequently give rise to claims for compensation on behalf of individuals who consider they have suffered unjustly from the exercise of rights jure belli, as, for instance, from the delay in releasing their ships or so forth. His majesty's government desire therefore to repeat what was said in Sir E. Grey's note of the 10th February, that the British prize court rules give the court ample jurisdiction to deal with any claims for compensation by a neutral arising from the interference with a ship or goods by the naval forces.

44. His majesty's government attach the utmost importance to the maintenance of the rule that, when an effective mode of redress is open to individuals in the courts of a civilized country by which they can obtain adequate satisfaction for any invasion of their rights, recourse must be had to the mode of redress so provided before there is any scope for diplomatic action. This is the course which his majesty's government have always themselves endeavored to follow in previous wars in which Great Britain has been neutral, and they have done so because it is the only principle which is correct in theory and which operates with justice and impartiality between the more powerful and the weaker nations. To that principle his majesty's government propose to adhere now that they are themselves the belligerent and that it is against them that the claims are advanced.

45. Inquiry has been made into the four cases of the Magicienne, the Don Jose, the Labuan and the Saxon, mentioned in the United States note (paragraph 27) as instances during the American civil war where his majesty's government put forward, through the diplomatic channel, claims for damages for seizure and detention of British ships alleged to have been made without legal justification. In two of these instances it is said at the time the demands were made the cases were before the American prize courts for adjudication. The results of the inquiry are contained in an appendix to this note. [Not printed.] The cases have there been dealt with in some detail because they are cited as indicating that it was the practice of her majesty's government during the American civil war to claim through the diplomatic channel damages for seizures of British ships alleged to have been made without legal justification. The cases do, in fact, establish the very proposition for which his majesty's government are now contending, viz., that in the cases where the prize court has power to grant relief there is no ground for putting forward claims through the diplomatic channel. In two of the cases the United States government themselves discontinued the prize court proceedings and admitted the right to compensation, and in the others they maintained the jurisdiction of the prize court, and her majesty's government acquiesced.

46. The statements contained in paragraph 31 of the United States note have led to a careful review of the practice which is now followed in the British courts with regard to vessels and cargoes which are released. It has been ascertained that in the case of vessels brought in for examination and allowed to proceed without discharging any part of their cargo no dues are charged. Where part of the cargo is discharged and passes into the jurisdiction of the prize court, the terms of the release are, of course, subject to the control of the court, and his majesty's government are therefore hardly in a position to give any definite undertaking with regard to the incidence of the expenses and charges which may have been incurred. In general, however, they realize that, in cases where goods are released and it transpires that there were no sufficient grounds for their seizure, no dues or charges should fall upon the owner. The statement that waivers of the right to put forward claims for compensation are exacted as a condition of release is scarcely accurate, but they are prepared to concede that such waivers would be a hardship to the owners of the goods released. In these circumstances his majesty's government will abstain from exacting any such undertakings in future and will not enforce those which have already been given.

47. Attached to the United States note are voluminous appendices containing lists of various vessels of all nationalities whose cargoes have been examined by the naval forces of the allies. These lists are a strong testimony to the vigor and effectiveness with which the naval forces are carrying out the measures which the allies have deemed it necessary to take against the commerce of their enemies. Perhaps the most striking conclusion which can be drawn from these lists is the rapidity with which the vessels are released and the very small amount of loss and inconvenience to which they are, as a rule, exposed.

48. Into the facts of each particular case his majesty's government feel sure the government of the United States will agree that there is no need for them to enter, for the lists comprise only ships dealt with by the British authorities; no corresponding lists are given of those dealt with by the French forces, and a detailed examination of these cases would be of no assistance in explaining the general principles which are being followed and which are common to both the allies. Furthermore, any discussion of the cases in this note might prejudice the chances of the claimants of recovering compensation through the prize court in cases where they consider that they are entitled to redress.

49. Finally his majesty's government desire to assure the United States government that they will continue their efforts to make the exercise of what they conceive to be their belligerent rights as little burdensome to neutrals as possible. Some suggestions have already been referred to in this note which, it is believed, would have that effect, and they are quite ready to consider others. For instance they have already appointed an impartial and influential commission to examine whether any further steps could be taken to minimize the delays involved in the present methods of dealing with neutral vessels. Again, it has been suggested that it would be a great commercial convenience if neutral shippers knew, before they made arrangements for ship space and for financing their consignments, whether they would be held up by belligerent patrols. A scheme is already in operation which ought to succeed in accomplishing this object. Other suggestions of a like nature might perhaps be made, and the allied governments would be prepared to give favorable consideration to any proposal for the alleviation of the position of neutrals, provided that the substantial effectiveness of the measures now in force against enemy commerce would not be thereby impaired.

50. His majesty's government are of opinion that it is to such mitigations that the allies and the neutrals concerned should look for the removal of the difficulties now encountered rather than to abrupt changes either in the theory or application of a policy based upon admitted principles of international law carefully adjusted to the altered conditions of modern warfare. Some of the changes which have been advocated would, indeed, if adopted in their entirety, render it impossible for the allies to persist with effect in their endeavors to deprive the enemy of the resources upon which he depends for the prosecution of operations carried on both by land and sea with complete disregard of the claims of humanity; for instance, the practice of visiting exclusively at sea, instead of in port, vessels reasonably suspected of carrying supplies to the enemy, or, again, the adoption of the principle that goods notoriously destined for the enemy may not be intercepted if they happen to be carried by a neutral vessel and addressed to a neutral consignee could not fail to have this result.

51. His majesty's government have noted with sincere satisfaction the intimation contained in the concluding passages of the United States note of the intention of the United States to undertake the task of championing the integrity of neutral rights. The first act of this war was the unprovoked invasion by the enemy of neutral territory—that of Belgium—which he was solemnly pledged by treaty to protect. The occupation of this territory was accompanied by abominable acts of cruelty and oppression in violation of all the accepted rules of war, atrocities the record of which is available in published documents; the disregard of neutral rights has since been extended to naval warfare by the wanton destruction of neutral merchant ships on the high seas, regardless of the lives of those on board. In every theater and in each phase of the war has been visible the same shocking disregard by the enemy of the rights of innocent persons and neutral peoples. His majesty's government would welcome any combination of neutral nations, under the lead of the United States, which would exert an effective influence to prevent the violation of neutral rights, and they cannot believe that they or their allies have much to fear from any combination for the protection of those rights which takes an impartial and comprehensive view of the conduct of this war and judges it by a reasonable interpretation of the generally accepted provisions of international law and by the rules of humanity that have hitherto been approved by the civilized world.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO SECRETARY OF STATE, (Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, Jan. 19, 1916.

Trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915. An act to provide for the extension of the restrictions relating to trading with the enemy to persons to whom, though not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory, it is by reason of their enemy nationality or enemy associations expedient to extend such restrictions (Dec. 23, 1915). Be it enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. (1) His majesty may by proclamation prohibit all persons or bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, resident, carrying on business or being in the united kingdom, from trading with any persons or bodies of persons not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory or in territory in the occupation of the enemy (other than persons or bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, residing or carrying on business solely within his majesty's dominions), wherever by reason of the enemy nationality or enemy association of such persons or bodies of persons incorporated or unincorporated, it appears to his majesty expedient so to do; and if any person acts in contravention of any such proclamation he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, triable and punishable in like manner as the offense of trading with the enemy; (2) any list of persons and bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, with whom such trading is prohibited by a proclamation under this act, may be varied or added to by an order made by the lords of the council on the recommendation of a secretary of state; (3) the provisions of the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, and of the customs (war powers) (number 2) act, 1915, and all other enactments relating to trading with the enemy shall, subject to such exceptions and adaptations as may be prescribed by order in council, apply in respect of such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, as if for references therein to trading with the enemy there were substituted references to trading with such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to enemies there were substituted references to such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to offenses under the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, or any of those acts there were substituted references to offenses under this act; (4) for the purpose of this act a person shall be deemed to have traded with a person or body of persons to whom a proclamation issued under this act applies if he enters into any transaction or does any act with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of such a person or body of persons, which, if entered into or done with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy, would be trading with the enemy.

2. This act may be cited as the trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Jan. 25, 1916.
Your Jan. 19.

Department has given consideration to enemy trading act approved Dec. 23 last, the apparent object of which is to prevent any person doing business in the united kingdom from trading with the enemies of Great Britain or persons having enemy association in any other part of the world, and the department has reached the conclusion that this act is pregnant with possibilities of undue interference with American trade, if in fact such interference is not now being practiced, as it is in opinion generally held in this country in which this government shares, that the act has been framed without a proper regard for the right of persons domiciled in the United States, whether they be American citizens or subjects of countries at war with Great Britain, to carry on trade with persons in belligerent countries, and that the exercise of this right may be subject to denial or abridgment in the course of the enforcement of the act, the government of the United States is constrained to express to his majesty's government the grave apprehensions which are entertained on this subject by this government, by the congress, and by traders domiciled in the United States, and it is, therefore, necessary to bring these views to the attention of Sir Edward Grey and to present to him a formal reservation, on the part of this government, of the right to protest against the application of this act, in so far as it affects the trade of the United States, and to contest the legality or rightfulness of imposing restrictions upon the freedom of American trade in this manner.

LANSING.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO SECRETARY OF STATE,
American Embassy, London, Feb. 19, 1916.

Sir: With reference to the department's cablegram of Jan. 25, and my telegraphic reply of the 18th instant, relative to the possible effects of the trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915, on the commerce of the United States, I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the information of the department, a copy of the note dated the 16th instant which has been addressed to the embassy by the foreign trade department of the foreign office in this connection.

THE BRITISH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
Foreign Office, Foreign Trade Department, Lancaster House, St. James', S. W., Feb. 16, 1916.

Your Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 26th ultimo relative to the possible effects of the trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915, on United States commerce.

The act was framed with the object of bringing British trading with the enemy regulations into greater harmony with those adopted by the French government since the commencement of the war by applying in some degree the test of nationality in the determination of enemy character in addition to the old test of domicile, which experience has shown cannot provide a sufficient basis under modern commercial conditions for measures intended to deprive the enemy of all assistance, direct or indirect, from national resources.

His majesty's government realized, however, that the application of this principle to its fullest extent, while entirely legitimate and in accordance with the practice of other countries, might, if applied at the present time to commercial activities as widespread as those of British subjects, involve avoidable inconvenience and loss to innocent traders.

They were careful, therefore, in devising the necessary legislation not only to avoid any definition which would impose enemy status upon all persons of enemy nationality and associations, but also to take powers of discrimination which would enable them to apply the purely commercial restrictions contemplated only in regard to those persons from whom it was necessary in British interests to withhold the facilities afforded by British resources.

His majesty's government have therefore abstained from a course of action admittedly within their rights as belligerents, which is not only the existing practice of the French government but in strict accordance with the doctrine openly avowed by many other states to be the basis upon which their trading with the enemy regulations would be founded in the event of war, and have confined themselves to passing a piece of purely domestic legislation empowering them to restrict the activities and trade of persons under British jurisdiction in such a manner and to such an extent as may seem to them to be necessary in the national interest.

His majesty's government readily admit the right of persons of any nationality resident in the United States to engage in legitimate commercial transactions with any other persons. They cannot admit, however, that this right can in any way limit the right of other governments to restrict the commercial activities of their nationals in any manner which may seem desirable to them by the imposition of prohibitions and penalties which are operative solely upon persons under their jurisdiction.

In claiming this right, which appears to them to be inherent in sovereignty and national independence, his majesty's government desire to assure the United States government that they will exercise it with every possible care to avoid injury to neutral commerce, and they venture to think that the voluntary limitation of their powers by the terms of the trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915, is evidence of their desire and intention to act with the greatest possible consideration for neutral interests.

I have, etc., (For the Secretary of State.)

AMERICAN FIRMS BLACKLISTED.

July 13 the British Official Gazette in London published a list of eighty-three American individuals, all except ten having their offices in New York city, placed on the blacklist under the trading with the enemy act. The American state department cabled to the American ambassador in London for details of the blacklisting and July 29 Ambassador Spring Rice delivered to the acting secretary of state in Washington the following memorandum:

"There is no idea of blacklisting a neutral firm merely because it continues to do business with a firm that is blacklisted, but if a neutral firm habitually and systematically acted as cover for a blacklisted firm, cases would be different.

"Regarding payments to blacklisted firms, our action does not affect payments by neutrals, and we habitually grant licenses to British firms to pay current debts to blacklisted firms, unless it is clear beyond doubt that such payments would be passed on to or create a credit for enemies in enemy territory. Many licenses have already been granted to British firms to receive from and pay to Knauth, Nachod & Co. and Zimmermann & Forshay.

"There is no objection to the Goodrich Tire company filling outstanding contracts, but it would be well to obtain a statement of the amount unfilled."

ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR
W. H. PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, July 26, 1916.

You are instructed to deliver to Sir Edward Grey a formal note on the subject of the enemy trading act, textually as follows:

"The announcement that his Britannic majesty's government has placed the names of certain persons, firms and corporations in the United States upon a prospective 'blacklist' and has forbidden all financial or commercial dealings between them and citizens of Great Britain has been received with the most painful surprise by the people and government of the United States, and seems to the government of the United States to embody a policy of arbitrary interference with neutral trade against which it is its duty to protest in the most decided terms.

"The scope and effect of the policy are extraordinary. British steamship companies will not accept cargoes from the proscribed firms or persons or transport their goods to any port, and steamship lines under neutral ownership understand that if they accept freight from them they are likely to be denied coal at British ports and excluded from other privileges which they have usually enjoyed, and may themselves be put upon the blacklist. Neutral bankers refuse loans to those on the list and neutral merchants decline to contract for their goods, fearing a like proscription. It appears that British officials regard the prohibitions of the blacklist as applicable to domestic commercial transactions in foreign countries as well as in Great Britain and her dependencies, for Americans doing business in foreign countries have been put on notice that their dealings with blacklisted firms are to be regarded as subject to veto by the British government. By the same principle Americans in the United States might be made subject to similar punitive action if they were found dealing with any of their own countrymen whose names had thus been listed.

"The harsh and even disastrous effects of this policy upon the trade of the United States and upon the neutral rights upon which it will not fail to insist are obvious. Upon the list of those proscribed and in effect shut out from the general commerce of the world may be found American concerns which are engaged in large commercial operations as importers of foreign products and materials and as distributors of American products and manufactures to foreign countries and which constitute important channels through which American trade reaches the outside world. Their foreign affiliations may have been fostered for many years, and when once broken cannot easily or promptly be re-established.

"Other concerns may be put upon the list at any time, and without notice. It is understood that additions to the proscription may be made 'whenever on account of enemy nationality or enemy association of such persons or bodies of persons it appears to his majesty expedient to do so.' The possibilities of undeserved injury to American citizens from such measures, arbitrarily taken, and of serious and incalculable interruptions of American trade are without limit.

"It has been stated on behalf of his majesty's government that these measures were aimed only at the enemies of Great Britain and would be adopted and enforced with strict regard to the rights of neutrals and with the least possible detriment to neutral trade, but it is evident that they are inevitably and essentially inconsistent with the rights of the citizens of all the nations not involved in war. The government of the United States begs to remind the government of his Britannic majesty that citizens of the United States are entirely within their rights in attempting to trade with the people or the governments of any of the nations now at war, subject only to well-defined international practices and understandings which the government of the United States deems the government of Great Britain to have too lightly and too frequently disregarded.

"There are well known remedies and penalties for breaches of blockade, where the blockade is real and in fact effective, for trade in contraband, for every unneutral act by whomsoever attempted. The government of the United States cannot consent to see those remedies and penalties altered or extended at the will of a single power or group of powers to the injury of its own citizens or in derogation of its own rights. Conspicuous among the principles which the civilized nations of the world have accepted for the safeguarding of the rights of neutrals is the just and honorable principle that neutrals may not be condemned nor their goods confiscated except upon fair adjudication and after an opportunity to be heard in prize courts or elsewhere. Such safeguards the blacklist brushes aside. It condemns without hearing, without notice and in advance. It is manifestly out of the question that the government of the United States should acquiesce in such methods or applications of punishment to its citizens.

"Whatever may be said with regard to the legality, in the view of international obligation, of the act of parliament upon which the practice of the blacklist, as now employed by his majesty's government is understood to be based, the government of the United States is constrained to regard that practice as inconsistent with that true justice, sincere amity and impartial fairness which should characterize the dealings of friendly governments with one another. The spirit of reciprocal trade between the United States and Great Britain, the privilege long accorded to the nationals of each to come and go with their ships and cargoes, to use each the other's shipping and be served each by the other's merchants is very seriously impaired by arbitrary and sweeping practices such as this.

"There is no purpose or inclination on the part of the government of the United States to shield American citizens or business houses in any way from the legitimate consequences of unneutral acts or practices; it is quite willing that they should suffer the appropriate penalties which international law and the usage of nations have sanctioned; but his Britannic majesty's government cannot expect the government of the United States to consent to see its citizens put upon an ex parte blacklist without calling the attention of his majesty's government, in the gravest terms, to the many serious consequences to neutral rights and neutral relations which such an act must necessarily involve. It hopes and believes that his majesty's government, in its natural absorption in a single pressing object of policy, has acted without a full realization of the many undesired and undesirable results that might ensue. POLK, Acting."

HOVERING OF BRITISH WARSHIPS NEAR THE TERRITORIAL WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS HAMILTON TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

United States Custom Service, Norfolk, Va., Nov. 20, 1915.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose herewith an affidavit filed in this office at 3 p. m. Nov. 19th, by Charles Moller, master of the Danish steamship Vinland. The affidavit is self-explanatory.

The master of the Vinland, upon filing the affidavit, stated he was under instructions to remain here for the present, and his vessel has not offered to clear. The chart, which the affidavit sets forth as accompanying same, was delivered at this office to-day, Nov. 20. It is rather large and bulky, and is being held in this office subject to instructions.

Respectfully, NORMAN R. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)

I, the undersigned, Capt. Charles Moller, master of the Danish steamship Vinland, herewith beg to make the following report to the American authorities concerned:

I left New York with my ship on the 10th day of Nov., 1915, at 5 a. m., in ballast, for Norfolk, Va., to load a cargo of coal for South America. At 7:15 a. m. dropped pilot at Scotland L. V., about 8:45 a. m. we sighted what later appeared to be a British warship, name unknown, steering a northerly course toward us. We changed our course immediately in order to get close under land and within the three mile limit. When abreast of Sea Girt light, the warship was bearing down on us, and closing in on us rapidly, and were presently hoisting signals for us to stop. We ignored his signals but proceeded on our course, now only two miles off land and still getting closer. We, however, dipped our flag in salutation, which was answered by war vessel at the same time pulling down his signal, but he did not give up following us. We approached the coast within one mile all the way.

At 11:30 a. m. passed Barnegat, one mile distant.

At 1:15 p. m. passed Brigantine L. V. on port bow.

At 5:25 p. m. passed Hereford light, three miles distant.

At 6:35 p. m. passed McCries gas buoy, close inside.

Near Five Fathom bank light vessel the darkness and haze setting in forced the British ship to get farther out, whereas we took the channel keeping close to the American coast. Between Hereford light and McCries gas buoy, we again sighted the British warship coming around the light vessel, steering towards us. As it was impossible at this spot to keep within the three mile limit, we took the Cape May channel and anchored inside the breakwater for the night. We left the breakwater for Norfolk at 4 a. m. on the 12th, following the coast within the three mile limit all the way. As it was hazy, nothing further was seen of the British warship. We arrived at Norfolk 8:15 p. m. Nov. 12, 1915.

I have marked out our course on the accompanying chart and also the route of the warship which was inside the three mile limit when ordering us to stop.

My ship is in legitimate trade and was in transit from one American port to another American port, and I hereby make record of the occurrence as it happened within American territory, while at the same time I have asked my government to protest against what is a violation of the international rules governing the seas.

CHAS. MOLLER,
Master, S. S. Vinland.

State of Virginia, City of Norfolk, to wit:

Personally appeared before me, Charles Moller, whose name is signed to foregoing writing, and declared same to be true and correct.

Given under my hand this 19th day of Nov., 1915.

(Seal.) L. B. FOSTER, N. P.
My commission expires May 7, 1917.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO THE ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, Nov. 27, 1915.
My Dear Mr. Acting Secretary: I hasten to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday's date informing me that according to an affidavit of the master of the Danish ship Vinland he was followed within the three mile limit by a British warship.

I have at once communicated the sense of your letter by telegraph to the British naval authorities in order that an inquiry may be instituted, and I will not fail to communicate to you the results of such inquiry with as little delay as possible.

I am, etc., CECIL SPRING RICE.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, Dec. 1, 1915.

Dear Mr. Secretary: With further reference to Mr. Polk's informal letter of the 28th ultimo, respecting the statements made by the master of the steamship Vinland to the effect that he was followed by a British cruiser within American territorial waters, I have the honor to inform you that I have now received a short report from the British naval authorities with regard to this incident. A more detailed report is, I understand, being forwarded to me.

I am informed that the facts of the case are not as stated by the master of the Vinland. The admiral adds that the British ships of war employed in the Atlantic have strict orders against the violation of American territorial waters and he has every reason to believe that these orders have been carefully observed. I will not fail to communicate to you the detailed report as soon as it is received.

I am, etc., CECIL SPRING RICE.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, Dec. 11, 1915.

Sir: With reference to my personal note of the 1st instant, I have the honor to inform you that a more detailed report has now been received with regard to the case of the steamship Vinland, the master of which stated that he had been chased by a British cruiser within the territorial waters of the United States.

The captain of the cruiser in question states that at 11 a. m. on Wednesday, Nov. 10, while he was steaming N. N. E. at ten knots, with Barnegat lighthouse abeam, distance five miles, a steamer was observed coming down ahead. At 11:10 a. m., when distant some three to four miles, she altered her course and steered in straight for the shore. The captain estimated that when she altered her course she was four miles from land.

Seeing that it would be impossible to stop her before she reached territorial waters the captain of the British cruiser turned his ship round and stopped outside Barnegat buoy, hoisting the signal "What ship?" The Vinland replied only by hoisting Danish colors, proceeding down the coast well inside the three mile limit.

The cruiser made no further signal, but followed the Vinland down the coast, keeping about six miles off. At 7 p. m., when off McCries Shoal buoy, Cape May, the captain of the cruiser received orders to return to his beat, and did so. It is further reported that the cruiser was never within four and a half miles of the shore, nor within one mile of the Vinland. The cruiser was generally about three or four miles off the Vinland, and made no signals beyond that described above.

I am, etc., CECIL SPRING RICE.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR.

Department of State, Washington, Dec. 16, 1915.

Excellency: With reference to your excellency's note of the 11th instant in regard to the case of the steamship Vinland, in which it is stated that while his majesty's cruiser did not enter territorial waters of the United States, he followed the Vinland down the coast from Barnegat lighthouse to off McCries Shoal buoy, Cape May, where the commander received orders to return to his "beat," which he did, I have the honor to refer to my informal notes of Oct. 5 and Dec. 22, 1914, and April 16, 1915 [notes not printed], calling your excellency's attention to the annoyance which his majesty's cruisers living off the principal commercial ports of the United States and stopping and searching vessels immediately beyond American waters have given to shipping, both oversea and coastwise, and to the seriousness with which the government of the United States regarded the hovering of belligerent warships about American coasts and ports.

In reply to my informal notes your excellency was good enough to assure me that his majesty's government had issued instructions which would prevent further molestation of American commerce in the trade lanes approximate to American waters and to the great ports of the United States. I cannot forbear, therefore, from calling to the recent incident in which his majesty's cruiser practically pursued a neutral vessel bound from one American port to another in ballast for the purpose of loading a cargo of coal for South America, to your excellency's attention. As his majesty's government is aware, this government has always regarded the practice of belligerent cruisers patrolling American coasts in close proximity to the territorial waters of the United States and making the neighborhood a station for their observations as inconsistent with the treatment to be expected from the naval vessels of a friendly power in time of war, and has maintained that the consequent menace of such proceedings to the freedom of American commerce is vexatious and uncourteous to the United States.

I am constrained, therefore, to request that you lay this matter before his majesty's government with the earnest request that instructions be issued to his majesty's ships to desist from a practice which this government is convinced has been maintained for long periods at a time and which is peculiarly disagreeable to it and to American traders concerned.

Accept, etc., ROBERT LANSING.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, Dec. 21, 1915.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th instant, in which, with special reference to the case of the steamship Vinland, you refer to the question of belligerent cruisers patrolling the American coast, and request that the matter may be laid before his majesty's government with the earnest request that instructions be issued to his majesty's ships to desist from a practice which the United States government is convinced has been maintained for long periods at a time and which is peculiarly disagreeable—both to that government and to American traders concerned.

Your note under reply has been communicated to his majesty's government, and I shall not fail to inform you of any further reply which I may be instructed to make on this subject.

I have, etc., CECIL SPRING RICE.

SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR.

Department of State, Washington, Dec. 22, 1915.

Excellency: Referring to my note of Dec. 16, 1915, in response to your note of the 11th instant, relative to the case of the steamship Vinland, which was followed by a British cruiser down the Atlantic coast from Barnegat Lighthouse to a point off McCries Shoal near Cape May, I have the honor to advise you of the receipt of a letter of Dec. 15 from the secretary of war, with which is enclosed a copy of a communication from the commanding officer, coast defense of Galveston, Fort Crockett, Tex., from which I quote as follows:

1. A British cruiser stood off the entrance to Galveston harbor from about 10 a. m. to 1 p. m., Sunday, Dec. 5, 1915. When asked her identity by signal from Fort San Jacinto she replied, "A registered British cruiser," and stated in reply to another query that she did not intend to enter the harbor.

2. The cruiser did not come within the three mile limit.

I have, etc., ROBERT LANSING.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

British Embassy, Washington, March 20, 1916.

Sir: I did not fail to communicate to my government copies of your notes of Dec. 16 and Dec. 22, in which exception was taken to certain proceedings of his majesty's ships off the United States coast. Referring particularly to the case of the Vinland, you reminded me that the United States government had always regarded the practice of belligerent cruisers patrolling American coasts in close proximity to the territorial waters of the United States and making the neighborhood a station for their observations as inconsistent with the treatment to be expected from the naval vessels of a friendly power in time of war and has maintained that the consequent menace of such proceedings to the freedom of American commerce is vexatious and uncourteous to the United States.

My government has carefully studied the contents of your notes. They are impressed by the fact that no suggestion seems to be made in either of them that British cruisers enter at all within the territorial waters of the United States, and they note that, on the contrary, the effect of the notes is to take exception to proceedings of these vessels when navigating admittedly on the high seas. The objection appears, indeed, to rest upon a claim to distinguish between different parts of the high seas, a claim which causes surprise to his majesty's government, who are unaware of the existence of any rules or principles of international law which render belligerent operations which are legitimate in one part of the high seas illegitimate in another.

Under these circumstances it appears desirable that the position taken up by the United States government should be more clearly defined. I am therefore instructed to have recourse to your courtesy in order to obtain fuller information as to the precise nature and grounds of the claims which are made by your government, as well as their extent, since my government are most anxious to recognize to the full any claims of this nature which are well founded in law, but are naturally unable to make a concession of what they regard as their belligerent rights.

The right asserted in this respect by the United States government in previous wars will no doubt be conceded by the United States government as well founded when exercised by others. It will be in your recollection that my predecessor, Lord Lyons, complained that Rear Admiral Wilkes had ordered the vessels under his command to anchor in such a position as to control the movements of ships desiring to enter or to depart from the port of Bermuda, and that he maintained a system of cruising in the neutral waters of Bermuda in excess of his rights as a belligerent. The charge was thus of a far more serious nature than that which the United States government now make against his majesty's ships. Admiral Wilkes in his reply, which was communicated officially by Mr. Secretary of State Seward to his majesty's legation on Jan. 15, 1863, asserted that his vessels "but maintained a system of cruising outside of the neutral waters of Bermuda in and under our rights as a belligerent." It is clear, therefore, that this officer of the United States government considered that his proceedings were fully justified so long as he could maintain that they had been restricted to the very practice of which the United States government now complain. Though resorted to in a far less aggravated form by his majesty's ships, and of which they appear actually to desire to impugn the legality.

I venture to inclose herewith extracts from the official records of the United States navy in the war of the rebellion which will illustrate the practice followed in that war by the United States ships when conducting belligerent operations in the neighborhood of neutral territory.

In this connection I may be permitted to point out that the number of enemy merchant ships now sheltering in harbors of the United States makes it necessary for his majesty's government to maintain their cruisers in a position where they can have the best chance of capturing these ships if they should attempt to escape. Another urgent reason for a close and constant watch, which no doubt will be appreciated by the naval authorities, is the fact which I have brought to the notice of your department and which has since formed the subject of judicial proceedings—that enemy ships received supplies of coal and provisions from neutral vessels leaving American ports. You stated in your reply to my representations that the United States government could not go further, in any suspicious case brought to its notice, than conduct an investigation in order to determine in every possible way whether the transaction appeared to be bona fide. And in the cases of this nature which were brought before the courts the charge was not a breach of neutrality, but merely of making false manifests. Under these circumstances, as enemy cruisers were at sea and preying on the commerce of the allies while they drew their supplies from American ports, it was incumbent on his majesty's cruisers to adopt such measures as were possible in order to cut off such supplies; and for this reason it is necessary that British cruisers should maintain such a position on the high seas as to enable them to intercept such supply ships before they have accomplished their purpose.

I have the honor to add in conclusion that in communicating the foregoing considerations I am instructed by Sir Edward Grey to state that while his majesty's government cannot abandon any of their rights, so far as they are in accordance with international law and the practice of the United States government themselves, they will use their best endeavors in order that the exercise of such belligerent rights should be attended with as little inconvenience to neutrals as possible.

I have, etc.,

Report of Commander Ridgely, United States navy, commanding U. S. S. Santiago de Cuba, Key West, Jan. 5, 1863:

"I left the anchorage off Great Stirrup cay to visit the Windward anchorages. On the 9th we passed through the passage between Eleuthera and Cat islands into Exuma sound and anchored the same day off Fernandez cay. On the 9th and 10th we passed close along San Salvador and Conception islands and Rum cay, and on the evening of the 10th anchored at the northeast end of Long Island off Dove cay.

"On the 12th we anchored off the south end of Eleuthera.

"I left Stirrup cay for the cruising ground to the northward of Abaco hoping to intercept vessels bound from Nassau to Charleston.

"The Octorara is watching the Providence channels."

All the places with the exception of Stirrup cay are British. Commander Ridgely seems to have cruised in British waters and to have stopped at British ports for belligerent purposes. Report of Lieut. Baldwin, U. S. S. Vanderbilt, off St. Thomas, Feb. 25, 1863:

"I came off St. Thomas with the intention of sending in a boat for information, when I received an order from Admiral Wilkes, who was in the harbor, to search the Peterhoff, which vessel had just sailed. I boarded her some five miles off the harbor."

Report from Lieut. Baldwin, Barbados, March 7, 1862:

"I sailed to join the U. S. S. Alabama at St. Pierre, Martinique. The Alabama having just arrived off the harbor, Commander Nichols communicated with our consul, I remaining outside."

"The Alabama then examined the island of Dominica while I went to Point a Pitre, Guadeloupe. I left next morning, meeting as agreed the Alabama off Basse Terre, on the western side of that island. After consulting with Capt. Nichols I proceeded to Isle de Aves, arranging that the Alabama should go to Sombrero and the Anegada passage and toward the north side of Puerto Rico and the anchorage of the Virgin passage. I found nothing at the Isle de Aves, and after looking among the islands in the Virgin passage went off St. Thomas, intending to send a boat for information. As I got off the harbor the English steamer Peterhoff was coming out; and at the same time I received an order from Admiral Wilkes, who was at anchor in the harbor, to search her and come in and anchor."

Admiral Wilkes, March 18, 1863:

"For a single vessel to blockade these roadsteads is almost impossible. I have resorted to the plan of having two—one to be anchored at Fort de France and the other at St. Pierre, only some eight miles distant."

Admiral Wilkes, March 20, 1863:

"On the subject of the squadron lying at St. Thomas, apparently watching the contrabands, I had some conversation with the governor. * * * I put it to him that there were vessels in the harbor preparing to run the blockade, and we were in these waters to prevent them if possible; that so far as the neutrality of the harbors and waters of these islands was concerned we should take care to observe it most strictly. * * * I would not complain of these vessels coaling and refitting, but when they reached the high seas we should act the part of a belligerent and overhaul them. * * * Therefore whether we lay at anchor or cruised off the port was of no consequence. * * *"

Admiral Wilkes, April 5, 1863:

"You will get your command in condition to cruise off the harbor and island of St. Thomas for the purpose of intercepting contraband runners. After you leave the inner harbor of St. Thomas you will anchor at times in the outer roads to procure information. * * * Bear in mind, however, that if a capture after examination proves unnecessary the neutrality limits must not be infringed upon."

(See the correspondence between the governor of St. Thomas and Admiral Wilkes of April, 1863.)

The admiral states in his letter to the governor of May 13 that "The idea of our using your harbor to make preparations or of infringing upon your neutral territory has never been conceived. It will not appear that we have in any case done so, but, on the contrary, have avoided making captures when it was ascertained that we were within the limits of his Danish majesty's territory." He then proceeds to describe the circumstances of the capture of the Peterhoff, the attempt to capture the Neptune, the capture of the Dolphin, and the boarding of the Intrinsic. All these ships were pursued after leaving the port by ships of the United States stationed for that purpose in or near the port.

Report of Admiral Wilkes May 13 of his conversation with the governor of Martinique:

"We had looked closely along the shores for any vessels that might be secreted and felt we had a right to remain outside the neutral limit."

Instructions of Admiral Wilkes May 13 to Commander Bryson:

"You will proceed to cruise off the Northeast channel or Abaco, where you will arrive about the dark of the moon, the time the blockade runners depart."

(See report of Commander Clary, U. S. S. Tioga, May 20, 1863.)

"Cruising from Bemini * * * Matanilla reef to along north end of Eleuthera to Cat island and Exuma sound, returning to South cays, Abaco Bahama, the Elbow, and Eastward."

Admiral Wilkes in his letter to the secretary of the navy of Jan. 2 stated that "we but maintained a system of cruising outside of the neutral waters of Bermuda in and under our rights as a belligerent."

The United States ship Iroquois in Nov., 1861, hearing that the confederate ship Sumter was in the port of St. Pierre, Martinique, stationed herself in the offing just beyond the marine league and kept up while there communication by boats with the shore and got the movements of the Sumter to be signaled to her. (See report of Capt. Palmer of Nov. 17, Nov. 23 and Nov. 25, 1861.)

SECRETARY OF STATE TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR. Department of State, Washington, April 26, 1916.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge your note of the 20th ultimo in the case of the Vinland and to state that I have not failed to give the matter set forth therein careful consideration.

Your government ask for further information as to the precise nature and grounds of the claims made by this government, as they are most anxious to recognize to the full extent any claims which are well founded in law, though unable to make a concession as to what they regard as their belligerent rights.

In reply it may be stated that the government of the United States advances no claim that British vessels which have been and are cruising off American ports beyond the three mile limit have not in so doing been within their strict legal rights under international law. The grounds for the objection of the government of the United States to the continued presence of belligerent vessels of war cruising in close proximity to American ports are based not upon the illegality of such action but upon the irritation which it naturally causes to a neutral country. The continued presence of British ships in the offings of the great American commercial centers is, I believe your excellency will agree, an inevitable source of annoyance and offense. The cases of the Vinland and Zealandia show how belligerent vessels may be the cause of offense, and illustrate how the presence of vessels in such close proximity to the coast of a neutral country may easily become the cause of controversies.

The irritation aroused by such a practice was, during the American civil war, manifested by Great Britain in the cases of the warships under the command of Rear-Admiral Wilkes, U. S. N., to which you have called attention, and was the subject of protest by the British government. The circumstances in those cases, however, were very different from the present and the practice complained of far less offensive. The cruising, against which Great Britain protested, was done in the vicinity of small islands near the American coast which, after the blockade of the southern ports had been established, were used as rendezvous for vessels notoriously engaged in running the blockade. In the present case British cruisers are patrolling off the great ports of this country from which trade routes diverge to all parts of the world, particularly to Great Britain and her allies.

In this connection, as showing that for over a century the objections of this government to British vessels hovering about the coasts have been maintained, I take the liberty of quoting from a letter of Mr. Madison, then secretary of state, dated May 20, 1807, to Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney:

"It is much regretted that provision could not be obtained against the practice of British cruisers in hovering and taking stations for the purpose of surprising trade going in and out of our harbors; a practice which the British government felt to be unjust to the dignity and rights of that nation at periods when it was neutral."

It is thus seen that the contention of this government in the present war is in no way a departure from the attitude taken in the early days of the republic; the conduct of American naval officers during the civil war, referred to above, having at least the justification of having been carried out in proximity to the seat of naval operations.

The fact that a number of German merchant vessels are laid up in American ports during the present war is not, as your excellency would seem to suggest, sufficient cause for the strict surveillance to which those ports are subject by British ships of war; for, I may state to you, a considerable number of American naval vessels have been constantly engaged since the war opened—and, I think, your excellency will admit, successfully engaged—in preventing the use of American ports as bases of naval operations. Furthermore, the alleged escape of vessels from American ports with supplies for German warships at sea, which has made it necessary, as you state, for his majesty's vessels to take a position which would enable them to intercept such supply ships, cannot now be regarded as a valid excuse for such action, because it is a matter of common knowledge that German warships have for many months been driven from the seas adjoining the coasts of the United States. In fact, your excellency has not called the possibility of the escape of supply ships to my attention since March, 1915. In the meantime, however, I have found it necessary to call your attention to certain instances of his majesty's ships hovering off American ports and communicating with boats coming out from shore and even coaling in American waters.

Further reasons, if necessary, may be adduced to oppose the British practice. In time of peace the mobilization of an army, particularly if near the frontier, has often been regarded as a ground for serious offense and been made the subject of protest by the government of a neighboring country.

In the present war it has even been the ground for a declaration of war and the beginning of hostilities. Upon the same principle the constant and menacing presence of cruisers on the high seas near the ports of a neutral country may be regarded according to the canons of international courtesy as a just ground for offense, although it may be strictly legal.

I have shown, I believe, that this government's contention is supported not only by ample precedents extending through American and British relations since the early years of the republic and by the analogy in the mobilization of armed forces near an international boundary, but also by the lack of a sufficient excuse for such an objectionable practice as I have had the unpleasant duty of bringing to your excellency's attention. I trust, therefore, that your government will be willing to recognize my government's contention to the extent of instructing his majesty's cruisers to withdraw from the vicinity of the territorial waters of the United States and remain at such distances from American harbors and coasts as to avoid the annoying and inquisitorial methods which have compelled this government to complain formally to your excellency's government.

I have, etc.,

ROBERT LANSING.

HARBORING SUBMARINES.

MEMORANDUM FROM ALLIES.

Memorandum, signed by representatives of Great Britain, France, Russia and Japan and dated Aug. 22, 1916, delivered to Secretary Lansing by the British embassy in Washington, Aug. 23:

In view of the development of submarine navigation and by reason of acts which in the present circumstances may be unfortunately expected from enemy submarines, the allied governments consider it necessary, in order not only to safeguard their belligerent rights and liberty of commercial navigation, but to avoid risks of depletion to urge neutral governments to take effective measures, if they have not already done so, with a view to preventing belligerent submarine vessels, whatever the purpose to which they are put, from making use of neutral waters, roadsteads and ports.

In the case of submarine vessels the application of the principles of the law of nations is affected by special and novel conditions: First, by the fact that these vessels can navigate and remain at sea submerged, and can thus escape all control and observation; second, by the fact that it is impossible to identify them and establish their national character, whether neutral or belligerent, combatant or noncombatant, and to remove the capacity for harm inherent in the nature of such vessels.

It may further be said that any place which provides a submarine warship far from its base with an opportunity for rest and replenishment of its supplies thereby furnishes such addition to its powers that the place becomes in fact, through the advantages which it gives, a base of naval operations.

In view of the state of affairs thus existing, the allied governments are of the opinion that submarine vessels should be excluded from the benefit of the rules hitherto recognized by the law of nations regarding the admission of vessels of war or merchant vessels into neutral waters, roadsteads or ports, and their sojourn in them. Any belligerent submarine entering a neutral port should be detained there.

The allied governments take this opportunity to point out to the neutral powers the grave danger incurred by neutral submarines in the navigation of regions frequented by belligerent submarines.

AMERICAN REPLY.

Washington, Aug. 31, 1916.

Memorandum.

The government of the United States has received the identical memoranda of the governments of France, Great Britain, Russia and Japan in which neutral governments are exhorted "to take efficacious measures tending to prevent belligerent submarines, regardless of their use, to avail themselves of neutral waters, roadsteads and harbors." These governments point out the facilities possessed by such craft to avoid supervision or surveillance or determination of their national character and their power "to do injury that is inherent in their very nature," as well as the "additional facilities" afforded by having at their disposal places where they can rest and replenish their supplies. Apparently on these grounds the allied governments hold that "submarine vessels must be excluded from the benefit of the rules heretofore accepted under international law regarding the admission and sojourn of war and merchant vessels in neutral waters, roadsteads or harbors; any submarine of a belligerent that once enters a neutral harbor must be held there," and therefore the allied governments "warn neutral powers of the great danger to neutral submarines attending the navigation of waters visited by the submarines of belligerents."

In reply the government of the United States must express its surprise that there appears to be an endeavor of the allied powers to determine the rule of action governing what they regard as a "noted situation" in respect to the use of submarines in time of war and to enforce a compliance of that rule, at least in part, by warning neutral powers of the great danger to their submarines in waters that may be visited by belligerent submarines. In the opinion of the government of the United States, the allied powers have not set forth any circumstance nor is the government of the United States at present aware of any circumstances concerning the use of war or merchant submarines which would render the existing rules of international law inapplicable to them. In view of this fact, and of the notice and warning of the allied powers announced in their memoranda under acknowledgment, it is incumbent upon the government of the United States to notify the governments of France, Great Britain, Russia and Japan that, so far as the treatment of either war or merchant submarines in American waters is concerned, the government of the United States reserves its liberty of action in all respects and will treat such vessels as, in its opinion, becomes the action of a power which may be said to have taken the first steps toward establishing the principles of neutrality, and which for over a century has maintained those principles in the traditional spirit and with the high sense of impartiality in which they were conceived.

In order, however, that there should be no misunderstanding as to the attitude of the United States, the government of the United States announces to the allied powers that it holds it to be the duty of belligerent powers to distinguish between submarines of neutral and belligerent nationality and that the responsibility for any conflict that may arise between belligerent warships and neutral submarines on account of the neglect of a belligerent to so distinguish between these classes of submarines must rest entirely upon the negligent power. LANSING.

RESTORATION OF THE POLISH KINGDOM.

On Nov. 5, 1916, the following manifesto was issued at Warsaw and Lublin, pledging, on the part of Germany and Austria-Hungary, the autonomy of Poland:

"His majesty the German emperor and his majesty the emperor of Austria and apostolic king of Hungary, inspired by firm confidence in a final victory of their arms and prompted by a desire to lead the districts conquered by their armies under heavy sacrifices from Russian domination toward a happy future, have agreed to form of these districts a national state with a hereditary monarchy and a constitutional government. The exact frontiers of the kingdom of Poland shall be outlined later.

"The new kingdom will receive the guarantees needed for the free development of its own forces by its intimate relations with both powers. The glorious traditions of the ancient Polish armies and the memory of the brave comradeship in the great war of our days shall revive in a national army. The organization, instruction and command of this army shall be arranged by common agreement.

"The allied monarchs express the confident hope that Polish wishes for the evolution of a Polish state and for the national development of a Polish kingdom shall now be fulfilled, taking due consideration of the political conditions prevailing in Europe and of the welfare and the safety of their own countries and nations.

"The great realm which the western neighbors of the kingdom of Poland shall have on their eastern frontier shall be a free and happy state, enjoying its own national life, and they shall welcome with joy the birth and prosperous development of this state."

It will be remembered that Aug. 15, 1914, Grand Duke Nicholas, then commander in chief of the Russian armies, issued a manifesto announcing that under the scepter of the czar of Russia Poland would be "born again, free in her religion and language and autonomous." Nov. 15, 1916, the Russian government issued an official statement announcing that it regarded the action of the German and Austro-Hungarian governments as null and void and a gross infringement of the fundamental principles of international law. "Russia's intention," concluded the statement, "is to create a complete Poland, embracing all Polish territories, which will enjoy the right, when the war is ended, of freely regulating their national, intellectual and economic life on the basis of autonomy under the sovereignty of Russia and maintaining the principle of a united state. This decision of his gracious majesty remains unshaken."

GENERAL REVIEW OF THE WAR.

When the present issue of the Almanac and Year-Book went to press the European war was still in full progress, though Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey had offered certain terms of peace to the allies. These terms will be found on another page. The outstanding features of the struggle as it proceeded in 1916 were these: The prolonged but futile efforts of the German army under Crown Prince Frederick William to capture Verdun, beginning in February and continuing until September; the revolt in Ireland; the naval battle off the coast of Denmark in which both sides lost heavily without decisive results; the battle of the Somme in which the allies were successful; the great Russian offensive resulting in the recapture of part of Galicia and the whole of Bukovina; the entry of Roumania into the war on the side of the entente resulting in a temporary triumph in Transylvania but finally in the defeat of the Roumanian armies and the occupation of the greater part of the country by the Teutonic allies; the recapture of Monastir by the reconstituted Serbian army and the allies, and the virtual disruption of Greece. The naval battle on the North sea and the Irish revolt are described elsewhere, but the other features enumerated will be briefly considered here.

STRUGGLE FOR VERDUN.

Under the direction of Crown Prince Frederick William, German troops began, Feb. 22, 1916, an attack on the defenses of Verdun, which, with almost no intermissions, continued until September. The net advance made by the assailants in the first five months of determined fighting was about four miles, but they were still three miles from their objective, with the French defenders as confident and resolute as ever. Sept. 9 the French, after a heavy artillery bombardment, swept forward and captured Fort Douaumont and most of the terrain which the enemy had conquered after months of costly effort. There was some desultory fighting after that in this region, but up to the middle of December nothing of importance had occurred on this part of the front.

The losses on both sides in this long drawn out siege were exceedingly heavy, but exact figures are not available. The French estimated in July that their opponents had lost about 500,000 men, while the Germans contented themselves with declaring that the French army was being "bled to death" at Verdun.

While Verdun as a fortress had little or no value, it was the moral effect of its capture which the Germans wished to achieve and which the French were equally determined to keep from them. Under the leadership of Gen. Petain they contested every inch of ground and made the Germans pay dearly for their gains. The valor shown by assailants and defenders made famous such names as Fort Douaumont, Le Mort Homme, Cumieres, Callette wood, Fort Vaux, Thiaumont, Malancourt, Haucourt, Bethincourt, Hill 304 and Hill 285. At each of these and other places in the Verdun region thousands of French and Germans laid down their lives.

Realizing that sporadic efforts on the various fronts could never produce decisive results, the allies early in this year came to the conclusion that they must all act together according to a definite plan or suffer defeat at the hands of the central powers, which by means of their inner lines and excellent railroad facilities were able to shift large bodies of troops quickly from one battle front to another as the exigencies demanded. A military conference was held in Paris in March and soon it became evident that an understanding had been arrived at and that henceforth all movements would be co-ordinated and so timed as to nullify the advantages possessed by Germany and Austria-Hungary.

BATTLE OF THE SOMME.

While the German crown prince was hammering away at the defenses of Verdun there was comparatively little action on other parts of the western front until July. There were many engagements which in other wars would have been called battles and there was an almost continual use of artillery on both sides, resulting in numerous deaths and a ceaseless flow of wounded to the hospitals in the home countries, but there was nothing comparable to the battle of the Champagne in the fall until the great general offensive was begun on the first day of July on the north and south sides of the River Somme.

That something out of the ordinary was about to occur was made clear in the last days of June, when the British, French and Belgians began a systematic and heavy bombardment of the German lines from the vicinity of Verdun all the way to the North sea. It was especially violent in the sections held by the British north and south of the Somme. New howitzers and other cannon of large caliber were brought into play for the first time and the detonations were so heavy that they could be felt even in the suburbs of London. The effect was to tear in pieces and reduce to ruins works upon which the enemy had spent many months of labor and millions in money. Then at 7:30 o'clock on the morning of the 1st day of July came the resistless forward movement of the British and French over the ground cleared by their artillery.

Over a front of twenty-five miles the allies captured all the German first line trenches. The British took the villages of Montauban, Mametz, Serre, Hebuterne, La Boisselle and several other places to the east of Albert, while the French captured Domperre, Beaucourt, Bussu and Fay to the south of the Somme and the approaches to the villages of Hardecourt and Curlu, north of the same stream. On the following day the British took Fricourt and the French seized the Mereaucourt wood and completed the capture of Curlu, piercing in some places the German second line trenches. Some 9,500 prisoners were taken by the allies on these two days.

The British objective was Bapaume, while the French aimed at Peronne. By July 14 the British and French had taken fifteen villages and more than 20,000 prisoners after fighting battles at Orvillers, Tropes wood, Longueval and Delville wood. It was reliably estimated that during the preliminary bombardment and during the advance the British alone expended 500,000 shells a day. The French probably used as many and possibly more. No official statements of the losses of men were issued by either side.

With temporary intermissions caused by bad weather and the necessity of making further preparations, the allies continued their attacks throughout the summer and fall. The British took, successively, Guillemont, Pozières, Clery, Leuze wood, Flers, Martinpuich, Courcellette, Morval, Thiepval, Guendecourt and Eaucourt l'Abbaye and helped the French to take Comblès. The French took Fleury, Maurepas, Soyecourt, Vermandovillers and Sailly. Most of these places were merely the sites of former peaceful villages which had been all but obliterated by the shells of the combatants on both sides. In December, when this record closed, the fighting had moderated somewhat, but the daily casualty lists were large on both sides.

RUSSIANS IN FRANCE.

One of the dramatic incidents of the year was the arrival in France of large detachments of Russian soldiers. They were greeted everywhere with enthusiasm by the French and after a few weeks of drilling were sent to the front. It was assumed that the men were sent by the czar as a token of the solidarity of the allies.

AUSTRIAN OFFENSIVE AGAINST ITALY.

On the Austro-Italian front the fighting until the middle of May, 1916, consisted of detached engagements chiefly among the valleys and mountains of the Trentino, in which much bravery was shown by the troops on both sides. Decisive results, however, were lacking until the Austrians massed their troops in the Trentino and then in the third week of May made a sudden general attack on the Italians. The latter, as they afterwards admitted, were taken by surprise and lost heavily in killed, wounded and prisoners. They were driven back along a front of about twenty miles between the Adige and Brenta rivers until they came to their own frontier. The Austrian troops were under the command of the crown prince, Archduke Charles Francis Joseph, and it looked for a time as if they would succeed in carrying the war entirely into Italian territory and cut off the forces operating in the Isonzo district.

Gen. Brusati, commander of the Italian forces, was relieved and the direction of affairs was assumed by Gen. Cadorna, the commander in chief. By the first week in June the advance of the Austrians had been halted and the Italians had begun regaining lost ground. Afterwards King Victor Emmanuel's forces gradually pushed the foe back until the situation was practically the same as it was before the Austrian offensive began.

Nothing more of general interest took place on this front until at the beginning of August, when the Italians gathered strong forces of men and guns along the Isonzo river where they began an energetic offensive on the 6th of the month. On the 8th they captured Sabotino and San Michele mountains and the Goritz bridgehead. On the 9th they captured Goritz itself and there was great rejoicing throughout Italy. Afterward they made an advance in the direction of Trieste, taking various positions on the Carso plateau. This was the general position near the close of the year.

GALLIPOOLI PENINSULA EVACUATED.

British military prestige suffered two serious setbacks in the course of the year. After many battles both on land and sea the forces under Gen. Sir Charles Monro were compelled to evacuate the Gallipoli peninsula between Jan. 1 and Jan. 9, 1916. The withdrawal was effected in good order, but the failure of the attempt to free the Dardanelles from Turkish control was a bitter pill to swallow. Many thousands of men and half a dozen splendid warships were sacrificed in this fruitless enterprise.

DISASTER AT KUT-EL-AMARA.

Kut-el-Amara in Mesopotamia, a short distance above the Persian gulf, was the scene of the second disaster to the British. After sustaining a siege of 143 days a force of between 10,000 and 12,000 English and Indian troops under Maj.-Gen. Charles Townshend was compelled to surrender, April 29, to the Turks because of the lack of provisions. Several efforts to bring relief to the beleaguered army were frustrated by floods, bad weather and the watchfulness of the Ottomans. A considerable British force is still at Sannayat, on the Tigris river.

GREAT RUSSIAN OFFENSIVE.

From the Baltic sea to the Black sea the front in Russia, to which the Germans had attained in the fall of 1915, remained comparatively quiet during the winter months. There were numberless small engagements, but operations on a large scale were not attempted. Meanwhile the Russians took advantage of the long lull completely to reorganize their armies. This work was performed by Gen. Ruskay, Gen. Ivanoff, Gen. Kuropatkin, Gen. Brussiloff, Gen. Sakharoff and others. The munitions factories were reorganized and extended until their output was greatly increased. Heavy artillery was obtained, both by manufacture at home and by purchases in Japan and the United States, from which countries large supplies of other war material were also secured. Raw recruits from all parts of the empire were drilled and sent to the front until the armies there largely outnumbered those facing them.

Though there was some lively fighting along the southern end of the line held by the Russians in the vicinity of Volhynia and Bukowina in January, it was not until June 3 this year that the Russians began an offensive on a large scale. With good roads and plenty of guns and ammunition the new armies, under Gen. Brussiloff, after a destructive "hurricane" bombardment, swept over the Austro-German defenses from the Pripiet river on the north to the Roumanian frontier, capturing thousands of prisoners and many guns. The Austrians seemed to have been taken by surprise and to have suffered something in the nature of a panic. They retreated precipitately and allowed themselves to be driven from place to place without offering any effective resistance. Lutsk, Czernowitz, Sniatyn and other important places fell into the hands of the Russians, who threatened Kovno and Lemberg. The entire Austrian crown land of Bukowina was occupied and the advance columns even reached the Carpathian mountains and threatened a serious invasion of Hungary by means of the Kirilbaba pass. Gen. Lechitsky led the Russian forces in the southeastern field and before their onsets the armies of Gen. Pflanzer had to give way.

Kovel, being an important railway point, was more vigorously defended. Here the Austrians were re-enforced by German troops under Gen. von Linsingen and made a stout resistance. On the Riga front the Russians under Gen. Kuropatkin and Gen. Evert kept the Hindenburg forces engaged, but did not advance far.

In July there was considerable fighting near the Stokhod river, but neither side could gain any decided advantage. In August the Russians crossed the Sereth river south of Brody and captured some villages. They took Timnach and Kryplin, and on the 11th took Stanislaw. They approached Halicz and threatened Lemberg, but did not succeed in taking either.

CAMPAIGN IN ARMENIA.

In the region of the Caucasus and in Armenia Grand Duke Nicholas conducted a successful campaign in the face of great difficulties. His most notable deeds were the capture of Erzerum, Trebizond, Baiburt and Erzincan. According to the latest reports he is advancing toward the west, driving the Turks in the direction of Sivas. In Arabia the natives rebelled against the Turks and took Mecca, Jiddah, Taif and Medina.

Turkish troops made a number of attempts to reach the Suez canal, but on each occasion were driven back by the British troops in Egypt, which were placed under the sole command of Gen. Sir A. Murray. The expected advance of Turkish troops in force under the direction of German officers did not take place.

In January the Germans in the Kameruns were driven from their last stronghold. In German East Africa British forces under the leadership of Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, who succeeded Gen. Sir Horace L. Smith-Dorrien, expelled the Germans from many places, occupying Chala, Taveta, Salaita, Moshi, Arusha, Umbugwe, Kondoa, the whole of the Usumbara railway, Neu Langenberg and territory between Lakes Tanganyika and Nyassa. The Belgians also penetrated a considerable distance into German East Africa, but a small part of which was left to the Germans.

ON THE SALONIKI FRONT.

Events on the Saloniki front did not attract much attention in the early part of the year. The time was mainly spent by Gen. Sarraill in strengthening his defenses and forces and in watching developments in Greece. King Peter's army, or that part of it which had escaped from Serbia in the disastrous campaign of 1915, was reorganized on the island of Corfu, whence it was transferred to Saloniki. In July the Serbs began an attack on the Bulgarian forces in northern Greece and with the help of the French and Italians captured several villages. Later they took Florian, Krushegrad, the Kaimakcalan range and finally Monastir. This place they and their allies were defending in December from the Bulgars and Germans who were attacking it from the north. The British in the Macedonian region operated farther to the east and took a number of villages. Greek troops belonging to the Venizelist faction took part in the fighting against the Bulgars.

ROUMANIA IS CRUSHED.

Roumania's entry into the war on the side of the entente and its reasons for taking this step are described on another page. It remains only to tell the result of that momentous decision. The first thing the Roumanians did after declaring war against Austria-Hungary was to seize the passes in the Carpathians to the north and northwest of Bukharest. Then they descended into Transylvania and took possession of Kronstadt, Hermannstadt and various other places. The Austro-Hungarian forces were at this time in bad shape owing to their defeats by the Russians and they could not make any effective resistance. In the meantime Germany and Bulgaria declared war on Roumania and Field Marshal von Hindenburg planned a strong campaign against the Balkan state. He placed large forces at the disposal of Field Marshal von Mackensen and Gen. von Falkenhayn. Mackensen's troops, augmented by such Bulgarian soldiers as could be spared from the Macedonian front, invaded Dobrogea and swept through it with little difficulty as far as Constanza on the Black sea. Falkenhayn attacked from the north and routed the Roumanians in a fierce battle at Hermannstadt. The Roumanians stopped his right wing and center, but his left wing broke through and captured the greater part of Wallachia. The Germans, after taking Orsova, Turnu-Severin and Craiova, advanced swiftly from the west, while on the south the Mackensen forces crossed the Danube and effected a junction with the left wing of the Falkenhayn army. The Roumanians, though assisted to some extent by the Russians, were outmaneuvered, outfought and outnumbered. Their artillery was also inferior to that of the enemy. Seeing the hopelessness of making a stand at Bukharest and preferring to save their armies from capture they retreated to the east in the direction of the Russian frontier, and Dec. 6 the German troops entered Bukharest. This was the crowning victory of the German campaign and was followed a few days later by the offer of general peace terms to the entente powers.

GREECE DIVIDED IN POLICY.

From the beginning of the war Greece has been divided into two camps. The one, led by King Constantine, has been in sympathy with the central powers, and the other, led by Eleutherios Venizelos, has been in favor of entering the war on the side of the entente. It was held by the latter faction that Greece was bound by treaty to come to the assistance of Serbia when that country was attacked by Austria and Germany. The allies, in view of their experience with Bulgaria, took measures which overawed the Greek government and compelled it to demobilize its army and submit to the continued occupation not only of Saloniki but of various islands on the coast and elsewhere belonging to Greece.

The feeling between the Venizelists and royalists finally became so bitter that the former openly declared themselves ready to assist the entente. Venizelos himself left Athens and, proceeding to the island of Crete, organized a provisional Greek government. This was formally recognized by the allies in October and Nov. 25 it declared war on Germany. It raised several regiments which afterward took part in the fighting against the Bulgars and Germans. In the meantime the allies put pressure on the government in Athens demanding among other things possession of the posts and telegraphs, the expulsion of the diplomatic representatives of the central empires and their allies, the delivery of the control of the Greek navy to the entente and finally the surrender of arms, cannon and ammunition. With most of these demands the king and his advisers complied, but they declined to give up the arms. In an effort to enforce this demand Admiral du Fournet of the French navy sent a detachment of troops to Athens. There they were attacked by the royalists and in the clash many were killed and wounded. The allied troops had to retreat. In December the entente powers were considering the question of taking radical action against King Constantine, some suggesting his deposition. A blockade was declared against all the ports of Greece. This was still in effect Dec. 12.

GERMAN PEACE PROPOSAL.

The following note addressed by Germany and her allies to various neutral powers was made public Dec. 12, 1916:

"The most terrific war ever experienced in history has been raging for the last two years and a half over a large part of the world—a catastrophe which thousands of years of common civilization was unable to prevent and which injures the most precious achievements of humanity.

"Our aims are not to shatter nor annihilate our adversaries. In spite of our consciousness of our military and economic strength and our readiness to continue the war (which has been forced upon us) until the bitter end, if necessary; at the same time prompted by the desire to avoid further bloodshed and make an end to the atrocities of war, the four allied powers propose to enter forthwith into peace negotiations.

"The propositions which they bring forward for such negotiations and which have for their object a guaranty of the existence, of the honor and liberty of evolution for their nations are, according to their firm belief, an appropriate basis for the establishment of a lasting peace.

"The four allied powers have been obliged to take up arms to defend justice and the liberty of national evolution. The glorious deeds of our armies have in no way altered their purpose. We always maintained the firm belief that our own rights and justified claims in no way control the rights of these nations.

"The spiritual and material progress which were the pride of Europe at the beginning of the twentieth century are threatened with ruin. Germany and her allies, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey, gave proof of their unconquerable strength in this struggle. They gained gigantic advantages over adversaries superior in number and war material. Our lines stand unshaken against ever-repeated attempts made by armies.

"The latest attack in the Balkans has been rapidly and victoriously overcome. The most recent events have demonstrated that further continuance of the war will not result in breaking the resistance of our forces, and the whole situation with regard to our troops justifies our expectation of further successes.

"If, in spite of this offer of peace and reconciliation, the struggle should go on for the allied powers are resolved to continue to a victorious end, but they disclaim responsibility for this before humanity and history. The imperial government, through the good offices of your excellency, ask the government of [here is inserted the name of the neutral power addressed in each instance] to bring this communication to the knowledge of the governments of [here are inserted the names of the belligerents]."

TERMS PRESENTED.

The peace terms which Germany was prepared to offer to the entente allies were not incorporated in the foregoing note, which the United States, Spain and Switzerland were asked to transmit to Britain, France, Russia and Italy. The Berlin foreign office, however, sent to Washington for publication in the United States an outline of the basis on which Germany was disposed to terminate the war. The peace terms thus informally presented provided:

For the complete restoration of Belgium.

For the evacuation by Germany of all territory captured in northern France during the progress of the war.

For the establishment of Poland and Lithuania as independent kingdoms.

For the retention of Serbia by Austria-Hungary and the restoration to Bulgaria of all territory lost by that country in the second Balkan war.

For the restoration to Austria of territory captured by Italy in the neighborhood of the Adriatic sea.

For the restoration to Germany of all her colonial possessions in Africa, the far east and other parts of the globe.

For the retention of Constantinople by Turkey.

AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC CHANGES.

Dr. Henry van Dyke, American minister to the Netherlands, resigned in the early part of December and was succeeded by John W. Garrett of Baltimore, Md.

The resignations of Thaddeus A. Thomson, minister to Columbia, and William H. Hornbrook, minister to Siam, were announced Dec. 4.

MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES.

War between the United States and Mexico was narrowly averted in 1916 owing to the massacre of American citizens on both sides of the Rio Grande. No better statement of the condition of things which led to the assembling on the Mexican border not only of the regular army but of about 100,000 militiamen has been made than that in the opening statements of a note written by Secretary Robert Lansing in reply to a communication from Gen. Carranza demanding the withdrawal from Mexico of an American punitive expedition sent to punish Villa and his bandits for a murderous raid in New Mexico. The note was handed to Eliseo Arredondo, Mexican minister designate, in Washington, June 20. The part recounting the hostile acts of the Mexicans was as follows:

"Department of State, Washington, June 20, 1916.—Sir: I have read your communication, which was delivered to me on May 22, 1916, under instructions of the chief executive of the de facto government of Mexico, on the subject of the presence of American troops in Mexican territory, and I would be wanting in candor if I did not, before making answer to the allegations of fact and the conclusions reached by your government, express the surprise and regret which have been caused this government by the discourteous tone and temper of this last communication of the de facto government of Mexico.

"The government of the United States has viewed with deep concern and increasing disappointment the progress of the revolution in Mexico. Continuous bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years the Mexican republic has been torn with civil strife; the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered nonproductive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through the territory contiguous to the United States and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempt at punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice.

"It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Mexico conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years of civil war.

"It would be tedious to recount instance after instance, outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity, to illustrate the true nature and extent of the widespread conditions of lawlessness and violence which have prevailed. During the past nine months, in particular, the frontier of the United States along the lower Rio Grande has been thrown into a state of constant apprehension and turmoil because of frequent and sudden incursions into American territory and depredations and murders on American soil, by Mexican bandits, who have taken the lives and destroyed the property of American citizens, sometimes carrying American citizens across the international boundary with the booty seized. American garrisons have been attacked at night, American soldiers killed and their equipment and horses stolen, American ranches have been raided, property stolen and destroyed and American trains wrecked and plundered.

"The attacks on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso postoffice and Las Peladas, all occurring during September last, are typical. In these attacks on American territory Carranzista adherents and even Carranzista soldiers took part in the looting, burning and killing. Not only were these murders characterized by ruthless brutality, but uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated.

"Representations were made to Gen. Carranza and he was emphatically requested to stop these reprehensible acts in a section which he has long claimed to be under the complete domination of his authority. Notwithstanding these representations and the promise of Gen. Nafarette to prevent attacks along the international boundary, in the following month of October a passenger train was wrecked by bandits and several persons killed seven miles north of Brownsville, and an attack was made upon United States troops at the same place several days later.

"Since these attacks leaders of the bandits, well known both to Mexican civil and military authorities, as well as to American officers, have been enjoying with impunity the liberty of the towns of northern Mexico. So far has the indifference of the de facto government to these atrocities gone that some of these leaders, as I am advised, have received not only the protection of that government but encouragement and aid as well.

"Depredations upon American persons and property within Mexican jurisdiction have been still more numerous. This government has repeatedly requested in the strongest terms that the de facto government safeguard the lives and homes of American citizens and furnish the protection which international obligation imposes to American interests in the northern states of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua and Sonora, and also in the states to the south.

"For example, on Jan. 3 troops were requested to punish the bands of outlaws which looted the Cusi mining property, eighty miles west of Chihuahua, but no effective results came from this request. During the following week the bandit Villa with his band of about 200 men was operating without opposition between Rubio and Santa Ysabel, a fact well known to Carranzista authorities. Meanwhile a party of unfortunate Americans started by train from Chihuahua to visit the Cusi mines, after having received assurances from the Carranzista authorities in the state of Chihuahua that the country was safe and that a guard on the train was not necessary. The Americans held passports or safe conducts issued by authorities of the de facto government. On Jan. 10 the train was stopped by Villa bandits and eighteen of the American party were stripped of their clothing and shot in cold blood, in what is now known as the 'Santa Ysabel massacre.'

"Gen. Carranza stated to the agent of the department of state that he had issued orders for the immediate pursuit, capture and punishment of those responsible for the atrocious crime and appealed to this government and to the American people to consider the difficulties of according protection along the railroad where the massacre occurred. Assurances were also given by Mr. Arredondo, presumably under instructions from the de facto government, that the murderers would be brought to justice and that steps would also be taken to remedy the lawless conditions existing in the state of Durango.

"It is true that Villa, Castro and Lopez were publicly declared to be outlaws and subject to apprehension and execution, but so far as known only a single man personally connected with this massacre has been brought to justice by Mexican authorities.

"Within a month after this barbarous slaughter of inoffensive Americans it was notorious that Villa was operating within twenty miles of Cusuhiriac and publicly stated that his purpose was to destroy American lives and property. Despite repeated and insistent demands that military protection should be furnished to Americans, he still openly carried on his operations, constantly approaching closer and closer to the border.

"He was not intercepted nor were his movements impeded by troops of the de facto government, and no effectual attempt was made to frustrate his hostile designs against Americans. In fact, as I am informed, while Villa and his band were slowly moving toward the American frontier in the neighborhood of Columbus, N. M., not a single Mexican soldier was seen in his vicinity. Yet the Mexican authorities were fully cognizant of his movements, for on March 6, as Gen. Gavira publicly announced, he advised the American military authorities of the outlaw's approach to the border, so that they might be prepared to prevent him from crossing the boundary.

"Villa's unhindered activities culminated in the unprovoked and cold blooded attack upon American soldiers and citizens in the town of Columbus on the night of March 9, the details of which do not need repetition here in order to refresh your memory with the hideousness of the crime. After murdering, burning and plundering, Villa and his bandits, fleeing south, passed within sight of the Carranza military post at Casas Grandes and no effort was made to stop him by the officers and garrison of the de facto government stationed there.

"In the face of these depredations not only on American lives and property on Mexican soil, but on American soldiers, citizens and homes on American territory, the perpetrators of which Gen. Carranza was unable or possibly considered inadvisable to apprehend to punish, the United States had no recourse other than to employ force to disperse the bands of Mexican outlaws who were with increasing boldness systematically raiding across the international boundary. The marauders engaged in the attack on Columbus were driven back across the border by American cavalry, and subsequently, as soon as a sufficient force to cope with the band could be collected, were pursued into Mexico in an effort to capture or destroy them.

"Without co-operation or assistance in the field on the part of the de facto government, despite repeated requests by the United States, and without apparent recognition on its part of the desirability of putting an end to these systematic raids, or of punishing the chief perpetrators of the crimes committed because they menaced the good relations of the two countries, American forces pursued two lawless bands as far as Parral, where the pursuit was halted by the hostility of Mexicans, presumed to be loyal to the de facto government, who arrayed themselves on the side of outlawry and became in effect the protectors of Villa and his band.

"In this manner and for these reasons have the American forces entered Mexican territory. Knowing fully the circumstances set forth, the de facto government cannot be blind to the necessity which compelled this government to act and yet it has seen fit to recite groundless sentiments of hostility toward the expedition and to impute to this government ulterior motives for the continued presence of American troops on Mexican soil. It is charged that these troops crossed the frontier without first obtaining the consent or permission of the de facto government. Obviously, as immediate action alone could avail, there was no opportunity to reach an agreement other than that of March 10-14, now repudiated by Gen. Carranza, prior to the entrance of such an expedition into Mexico, if the expedition was to be effective.

"Subsequent events and correspondence have demonstrated to the satisfaction of this government that Gen. Carranza would not have entered into any agreement providing for an effective plan for the capture and destruction of the Villa bands. While the American troops were moving rapidly southward in pursuit of the raiders, it was the form and nature of the agreement that occupied the attention of Gen. Carranza rather than the practical object which it was to attain—the number of limitations that could be imposed upon the American forces to impede their progress, rather than the obstacles that could be raised to prevent the escape of the outlaws."

The remainder of the note was occupied with replying to other points made by the Carranza leader.

SANTA YSABEL MASSACRE.

Eighteen Americans were killed by Mexican bandits a few miles west of Santa Ysabel, a station on the Mexico Northwestern railway in western Chihuahua, Mexico, Monday, Jan. 10, 1916. The party, which was made up of mining men, left the city of Chihuahua about noon bound for Cusiuhuirachi, where they were employed by the Cusiuhuirachi Mining company, the property of which is owned by the Potter Palmer estate of Chicago. Their leader was C. R. Watson, chairman of the mine and smelter operators' committee of Chihuahua and manager for the mining company named. The train had reached a point about forty miles west of Chihuahua when it was stopped by a derailed car ahead of it in a cut. The coaches were boarded by a large number of armed Mexicans, who ordered the Americans out into the cut, where they were robbed, stripped of their clothing and shot to death. One of their number, Thomas H. Holmes, managed to elude the bandits by concealing himself in some brush near the track and then to make his way to Chihuahua, where he made the facts of the massacre known. He was the only survivor.

F. E. Stephenson, secretary of the Mining and Smelters' association of Chihuahua, organized a party which proceeded to the scene of the killing and recovered the bodies of the Americans, sending them on to El Paso, where they arrived Thursday morning, Jan. 13. He said that the men had been stripped of their clothing and that their heads had been nearly blown off. It was learned that the bandits, who numbered between 300 and 500, were led by two Villa generals, Pablo Lopez, a Yaqui chief, and Gen. Rayna.

The victims of the massacre were: C. R. Watson, Chicago, Ill.; Maurice Anderson, El Paso, Tex.; E. L. Robinson, El Paso, Tex.; George W. Newman, Keene, N. H.; Charles Wadleigh, Buffalo, N. Y.; Alexander Hall, Douglas, Ariz.; C. A. Pringle, San Francisco, Cal.; A. H. Couch, Barnhart, Tex.; W. D. Pearce, Los Angeles, Cal.; H. C. Hasse, Kansas City, Mo.; Thomas W. Evans, San Antonio, Tex.; R. P. MacHatton, El Paso, Tex.; Thomas Johnson, El Paso, Tex.; J. W. Woon, El Paso, Tex.; R. H. Simmons, Danville, Iowa; M. R. Romero, El Paso, Tex.; J. P. Coy, Los Angeles, Cal.; W. J. Wallace, Chicago, Ill.

Early on the morning of March 8 Villa with a force of 1,500 men attacked Columbus, N. M., and the small force of American troops stationed there. Before the latter could make effective resistance eight of them were killed and half a dozen wounded. In the town the bandits killed nine civilians, including one woman, looted a number of stores and set fire to several buildings. The soldiers after recovering from the first shock of the attack drove the bandits from the town and pursued them to the border, killing some seventy-five of them.

This unprovoked invasion of American soil and massacre of civilians aroused the country and the authorities in Washington took immediate steps to send a punitive expedition into Mexico to hunt down and punish the Villa-bandits. Carranza was notified that this would be done. Additional troops were hurried to the border and it was arranged that Gen. John J. Pershing should lead a strong force of regulars into Mexico in pursuit of Villa. About 18,000 men were stationed along the frontier, all under command of Gen. Frederick Funston.

Maj. Frank Tompkins at the head of the 13th cavalry was the first to pursue the bandits. In the mining town of Parral he came into conflict with Villa sympathizers who began firing on his men. They returned the fire, killing some fifty Mexicans. In the meantime Carranza objected to any large force of Americans going into Mexico unless his troops were allowed to cross the border in pursuit of bandits. This was agreed to. On March 15 Gen. Pershing with a force of more than 4,000 men crossed the border south of Columbus, N. M. Col. George J. Dodd, with a smaller column, crossed farther west.

On March 27 Villa and his men captured Guerrero and killed the Carranza garrison of 170 men. Col. Dodd heard of the raid and with the 7th and 10th cavalry overtook the Villa force at San Geronimo ranch near Guerrero, attacked and routed it, killing thirty men, including Gen. Eliseo Hernandez. Other encounters of a more or less serious nature followed, the bandits generally getting the worst of it. Gen. Carranza again made a demand for the withdrawal of American troops from Mexico, but the authorities in Washington, instead of complying, sent 2,000 additional troops to Gen. Pershing.

In the latter part of April and first part of May Maj.-Gen. Hugh L. Scott, Maj.-Gen. Funston and Gen. Alvaro Obregon, representing the de facto Mexican government, held a series of conferences at El Paso, which ended without any definite understanding having been reached. Gen. Carranza grew more insistent in his demands that the American troops leave Mexican soil and May 31 a note was received from him by the state department in Washington questioning the good faith of the United States and practically threatening war. It was in reply to this note that Secretary Lansing sent his vigorous message of June 20.

In the meantime Mexican bandits had raided Glenn Springs and other places in Texas, killing several soldiers and civilians. They also visited San Ignacio, Tex. where they killed three soldiers and wounded three more. Anti-American demonstrations occurred in Durango, Chihuahua and other places and some of the American consuls were compelled to leave their posts. June 16 Gen. Jacinto Trevino, commanding 50,000 Mexican troops in the state of Chihuahua, sent the following message to Gen. Pershing, who was then at Namiquipa, the advanced base of the American expedition:

"Any movement of troops of the American forces now in Mexico in any of the directions of south, east or west will be considered an overt act against the sovereignty of the republic of Mexico and will be the signal for a general attack by the Carranza forces."

To this demand Gen. Pershing sent the following reply:

"I have not received orders to remain stationary or to withdraw. If I see fit to send troops in pursuit of bandits to the south, east or west in keeping with the object of this expedition I shall do so.

"If any attack is made on any part of my forces while performing such duties the entire military strength of the expedition will be used against the attacking force.

"Gen. Trevino as commander in chief of the de facto government's troops in the north will be held responsible for Mexican forces within striking distance of the American forces."

This correspondence indicated an extremely serious situation and June 18 the war department in Washington issued an order to the adjutant-general of each state to mobilize all of the militia, concentrate them in the state camps and hold them in readiness for the call of Maj.-Gen. Funston for service on the border. At the same time the following official statement was issued:

"In view of the disturbed conditions on the Mexican border and in order to assure complete protection for all Americans, the president has called out substantially all militia and will send them to the border whenever and as fully as Gen. Funston determines them to be needed for the purposes stated. If all are not needed an effort will be made to relieve those on duty there from time to time so as to distribute the duty.

"This call for militia is wholly unrelated to Gen. Pershing's expedition and contemplates no additional entry into Mexico except as may be necessary to prosecute certain bandits who attempt outrages on American soil. The militia is being called out so as to leave some troops in the several states. They will be mobilized at their home stations where the necessary training can be done."

The call was promptly met and militia to the number of about 100,000 gathered in their armories in the various states and after brief period of training were mustered into the federal service and taken to various camps in Texas, such as San Antonio, Brownsville, and other places not far from the Mexican border. Subsequently many of the troops were allowed to return home, but many regiments were still on duty when this record closed (Dec. 15).

FIGHT AT CARRIZAL.

On June 21 two troops of the 10th (negro) cavalry under command of Capt. Charles T. Boyd and Capt. Louis Morey came into collision with a Mexican force under Gen. Gomez at Carrizal, near Villa Ahumada, and in the engagement which followed the American force, being largely outnumbered, was forced to withdraw after several men had been killed and a score taken prisoners. Gen. Gomez and Capt. Boyd were killed and Capt. Morey wounded. Morey and a number of the troopers hid from the Mexicans and finally escaped.

This affair led to another crisis in the relations of the two countries. President Wilson conferred with the leaders of both branches of congress and then made a demand for the release of the negro troopers who had been taken to Chihuahua city and imprisoned. Gen. Carranza deemed it wise to comply with this demand and the soldiers arrived at El Paso, Tex., June 29. No other collisions between the Americans and Carranza's troops occurred.

South American diplomats in the early part of July made overtures to mediate between the United States and Mexico. Their efforts may have had some effect on the attitude of Gen. Carranza, as he became more conciliatory and in his reply to Secretary Lansing's note of June 20 he suggested friendly negotiations. The suggestion was accepted, as was a subsequent proposal that each country appoint three commissioners to meet and consider all the questions at issue. On Aug. 3 it was announced in the City of Mexico that Luis Cabrera, Ygnacio Bonillas and Alberto Paul had been chosen to represent Mexico. Aug. 22 the state department in Washington announced that the commissioners on the part of the United States would be Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior; Judge George Gray of Wilmington, Del., and Dr. John R. Mott of New York, N. Y.

The commissioners met in New London, Conn., Sept. 6, and conferred at intervals until Nov. 24, when they signed a protocol of which the following is a paraphrase:

"First—The American troops now in Chihuahua commanded by Gen. John J. Pershing shall be withdrawn within forty days from the approval of the protocol by the respective governments, provided that within that time the conditions in that part of Mexico have not become such as to endanger the American border. In such event the time shall be extended.

"Second—The Mexican army shall patrol the Mexican side of the border and the American army the American side, but this shall not preclude co-operation between the two forces to preserve peace upon the border.

"Third—It shall be left to the commanding officers of the armies on the border of both nations to enter into such arrangements for co-operation in operations against bandits whenever it is possible."

CHRONOLOGY. 1910-1915.

Following is a chronology of the main events in the political history of Mexico since the overthrow of President Porfirio Diaz: June 26, 1910—Porfirio Diaz elected president for eighth successive term. Nov. 18, 1910—Revolution started by anti-reactionists.

- Nov. 23, 1910—Francisco I. Madero proclaims himself provisional president of Mexico.
- May 25, 1911—Porfirio Diaz resigns presidency of Mexico.
- Oct. 1, 1911—Francisco I. Madero elected president of Mexico.
- Oct. 16, 1912—Gen. Felix Diaz begins new revolution.
- Oct. 27, 1912—Gen. Diaz captured by federal troops.
- Feb. 9, 1913—Military uprising in City of Mexico; Gen. Diaz liberated; rebels seize arsenal.
- Feb. 11-19, 1913—Bombardment in heart of City of Mexico, rebels firing from arsenal and federalists from national palace.
- Feb. 19, 1913—President Madero's own troops revolt; he is arrested and Gen. Victoriano Huerta is proclaimed provisional president; Gustavo Madero executed.
- Feb. 21, 1913—New revolution started by Venustiano Carranza, governor of Coahuila.
- Feb. 23-24, 1913—President Francisco I. Madero and Vice-President Jose Pino Suarez shot to death about midnight of Feb. 23-24.
- Aug. 4, 1913—Resignation of Ambassador Wilson accepted; John Lind of Minnesota sent to Mexico as personal representative of President Wilson.
- Oct. 14, 1913—Gen. Huerta suspends constitutional guaranties and proclaims himself dictator of Mexico.
- Oct. 26, 1913—Presidential and congressional elections take place; Gen. Huerta elected president and Gen. Blanquet vice-president.
- Oct. 27-28, 1913—Gen. Felix Diaz flees to Havana.
- Nov. 2, 1913—Gen. Huerta notified that he must resign the presidency of Mexico.
- Dec. 31, 1913—Year closes with rebels generally victorious in northern Mexico and Gen. Huerta still in presidential office in the City of Mexico.
- April 9, 1914—Paymaster and seven sailors of the U. S. gunboat Dolphin arrested at boat landing at Tampico by Mexican soldiers; after their release Rear-Admiral Mayo demands an apology, punishment of the officer responsible and a public salute of twenty-one guns to the United States flag within twenty-four hours.
- April 18, 1914—Washington authorities give President Huerta until 6 p. m. Sunday, April 19, to comply with American demand for salute in the usual manner.
- April 19, 1914—Huerta government refuses to fire unconditional salute to American flag.
- April 20, 1914—President Wilson appears before joint session of congress and asks for authority to use naval and military forces of the United States in enforcing American rights in Mexico.
- April 21, 1914—United States marines and sailors land at Vera Cruz and occupy custom house and part of city after sharp fighting.
- April 22, 1914—Senate and house agree on joint resolution declaring that President Wilson is justified in using armed forces of United States in Mexico.
- April 25, 1914—Brazil, Argentina and Chile offer to mediate between the United States and Mexico; offer accepted by President Wilson.
- April 28, 1914—Gen. Funston and 5th brigade arrive at Vera Cruz.
- May 20, 1914—Peace conference begun at Niagara Falls, Ontario.
- June 24, 1914—Peace protocol signed by mediators.
- July 5, 1914—Gen. Huerta chosen president and Gen. Blanquet vice-president in election held in part of Mexico by federalists.
- July 15, 1914—Gen. Huerta resigns from provisional presidency of Mexico; Francisco Carbajal chosen to succeed him.
- July 20, 1914—Huerta and Blanquet sail for Jamaica on the German cruiser Dresden.
- Aug. 14, 1914—Gen. Carranza named as provisional president of Mexico in agreement signed by Gen. Obregon and Gov. Iturbide; Carbajal retires from the presidency.
- Sept. 23, 1914—Gen. Villa denounces the Carranza government and declares his independence.
- Nov. 9, 1914—Gen. Carranza proclaims himself first chief of the republic.
- Nov. 11, 1914—War declared between Carranza and Villa elements of the constitutional army.
- Nov. 23, 1914—American troops withdrawn from Vera Cruz.
- Jan. 10, 1915—Gen. Roque Gonzales Garza named provisional president of Mexico by convention in Mexico City.
- Jan. 27, 1915—Provisional President Garza leaves Mexico City.
- Feb. 3, 1915—Gen. Villa proclaims himself in charge of the presidency of Mexico.
- March 9, 1915—American citizens warned by Secretary W. J. Bryan to leave Mexico; American war vessels ordered to Vera Cruz.
- March 11, 1915—John B. McManus, American, killed by Zapatistas in Mexico City.
- April 12, 1915—Gen. Huerta arrives in New York from Spain.
- June 27, 1915—Gen. Huerta arrested by federal officers at Newman, N. M., and taken to Fort Bliss at El Paso, Tex., on charge of inciting revolution against friendly country.
- July 2, 1915—Porfirio Diaz, former president of Mexico, dies in Paris, France.

WORK OF UNITED STATES CENSUS BUREAU.

The bureau of the census in the department of commerce in Washington, D. C., is charged with the duty of taking periodical censuses of the population, agriculture, manufactures and mines and quarries of the United States, together with such special statistics as are required by congress from time to time. The next general or decennial census will be taken in 1920. A census of electrical industries is taken every fifth year; the last one was taken in 1913 and consequently the next will be taken in 1918, for the statistics of 1917. Other regular censuses include:

Wealth, debt and taxation; taken every tenth year; latest statistics are for fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Manufacturing industries; taken every fifth year; next report will relate to calendar year 1914.

Agriculture; taken at ten-year intervals; next census will be taken late in fall of 1915 and will relate to the crops of that year.

Religious bodies; taken every tenth year; next census will be taken in 1916.

LOCAL GOVERNMENTS WITHIN CHICAGO.

[From report of Chicago Bureau of Public Efficiency.]

There are twenty-two distinct governing agencies in the territory that Chicago comprises, most of them absolutely independent of one another. They are:

City of Chicago.
Board of education.
Library board.
Municipal tuberculosis sanitarium.
Cook county.
Sanitary district of Chicago.
South park commissioners.
West Chicago park commissioners.
Lincoln park commissioners.
Ridge avenue park commissioners.
North shore park commissioners.
Calumet park commissioners.
Fernwood park commissioners.
Ridge park commissioners.
Irving park commissioners.
Northwest park commissioners.
Old Portage park commissioners.

Edison park commissioners.
West Pullman park commissioners.
Ravenswood Manor-Gardens park commissioners.
River park commissioners.
Commissioners of the first park district of the city of Evanston.

The board of education, the library board and the tuberculosis sanitarium, while having their separate tax levies, are subject to a degree to control by the mayor and city council. The other bodies named are independent of one another. The state public utilities commission, though not a taxing body, is, in a sense, another governmental agency in the city.

If account were taken of the eight towns lying wholly within the city of Chicago (Lake View, North Chicago, Jefferson, West Chicago, South Chicago, Hyde Park, Lake and Evanston), which still have legal existence, the number of governing bodies comprised in the city would be thirty, instead of twenty-two.

GOVERNMENT OF ILLINOIS.

Legislative power is vested in a general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives, both elected by the people. The state is divided into fifty-one senatorial districts, each of which elects a senator and three representatives. The general assembly makes laws and appropriates money for the government of the state and in general stands in the same relation to the state as congress does to all the states as a whole. The powers and duties of the chief executive officers are as follows:

Governor—The governor is vested with the chief executive power of the state. He is the commander in chief of the military and naval forces and may call out the militia to maintain the peace. He is required to inform the general assembly, by message, of the condition of affairs of the state and to recommend needed legislation. He may, by proclamation, call a special session of the assembly or adjourn it in case of disagreement between the two houses. He has the power to appoint certain officers and during a recess of the senate may fill vacancies or remove certain officers and may call special elections to fill vacancies in certain offices. He may make requisitions upon the governors of other states for the return of fugitives from justice or offer rewards for the arrest of offenders against the laws of the state. He exercises a general supervision over the penitentiaries and may grant reprieves, commutations and pardons and may restore the rights of citizenship to ex-convicts. He may approve acts of the legislature and exercise the veto power.

Lieutenant-Governor—This officer is ex officio president of the senate and has the power to cast the deciding vote in case of a tie. In case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability on the part of the governor, the lieutenant-governor succeeds to the office to the close of the term.

Secretary of State—The secretary of state is charged with the safekeeping of the original laws and resolutions of the general assembly; with all books, bills and documents deposited with him by either house, and with all bonds, records and papers filed in his office. He keeps a record of the official acts of the governor; furnishes certified copies of the same to the assembly on request and certified copies of any of the records of his office on the payment of the statutory fees. He countersigns and affixes the seal of the state to all proclamations and commissions issued by the governor; issues licenses for incorporations and certificates of organization to cities and villages and incorporated towns. He has charge of most of the buildings and grounds belonging to the state in Springfield, furnishes supplies for the general assembly and supervises the printing and distribution of all the public documents of the state. He calls the house of representatives to order at the beginning of each general assembly and presides over the same until the election of a speaker. He is the keeper of the great seal of the state and is the custodian and sealer of weights and measures.

Auditor—The auditor is required to keep all the accounts of the state; to audit the accounts of all officers or other persons authorized to receive moneys from the state treasury; to personally sign all warrants drawn on the treasury; to institute suits wherein the state is a plaintiff, and to make a biennial report of the business of his office to the governor. With the governor and treasurer he determines the state tax rate. He exercises a general supervision over state banks, building, loan and homestead associations.

State Treasurer—The state treasurer is custodian of the revenues and public moneys of the state. He must make monthly settlements with the auditor and a biennial report to the governor.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—The superintendent exercises a general supervision over all the public schools of the state. He is the general and legal adviser of the county superintendents and must report biennially to the governor the general condition of all the schools of the state, the amount raised by taxation for school purposes and the manner of its expenditure and the general condition of all the school funds. He may grant state certificates to teachers or cause them to be withheld and must visit charitable institutions which are educational in character.

Attorney-General—It is the duty of the attorney-general to represent the state in the Supreme court in all cases in which the state is interested; to act as counsel for all state officials; to be the legal adviser of the governor and other state officers in matters relating to their official duties, and, on request, to furnish them, as well as either branch of the general assembly, with written opinions upon constitutional or legal questions.

BOULEVARD CONNECTING LINK PROJECT.

Plans for properly connecting the south and north side boulevard systems of Chicago by means of widening Michigan avenue and a new bridge over the river began to be studied seriously in 1905 by committees of various public bodies, such as the city council, real estate boards, park boards and by architects and other private individuals. In 1906, 1907 and 1908 Daniel H. Burnham and Edward H. Bennett, architects, working under the direction of the Commercial club, prepared the famous "Plan of Chicago," of which one feature was the Michigan avenue improvement project. Nov. 1, 1909, the Chicago Plan commission, representing the official administration and the public generally, was created by the city council in response to an official request from Mayor Fred A. Busse, who appointed its members. It held its first meeting Nov. 4 in that year and elected Charles H. Wacker as president. The duty of the commission was to carry out as far as practicable from time to time the ideas formulated in the Commercial club, or as it is often called, the Burnham plan.

Study of the Michigan avenue project was begun at once by the commission and after a long series of meetings and conferences it adopted, July 10, 1911, a plan which was presented two days later to the board of local improvements for its consideration. June 2, 1913, that body submitted to the city council an ordinance for carrying the plan into effect and July 14 the ordinance was passed. Some of the property owners affected began proceedings attacking the validity of the ordinance and in December the State Supreme court made a ruling in which it declared that the ordinance was invalid because of faulty description of land involved in the project. A revised ordinance, correcting the errors pointed out by the court, was introduced in the council and finally passed by that body March 23, 1914, without opposition. At the election of Nov. 3, 1914, the people of Chicago approved a proposition to issue bonds in the sum of $3,800,000 for paying that part of the cost chargeable to the city for the boulevard link.

The ordinance as passed calls for the improvement of a thoroughfare extending from Randolph street northward along Michigan avenue, over the river, thence over private property and along Pine street and Lincoln parkway to Chicago avenue. Michigan avenue is to be widened to 127.5 feet and that part of the new thoroughfare north of the river is to be 141 feet wide. The improvement is to consist of a two-level roadway comprising an upper level extending the entire distance between Randolph street and Chicago avenue and supported between Lake street and Grand avenue upon an elevated steel and concrete structure, and a lower level extending from Lake street to Grand avenue. The bridge is to be double decked and of the bascule type, the upper level connecting the parts of the upper level of the thoroughfare and the lower level connecting the portions of the lower level of the thoroughfare north and south of the river. The upper level of the bridge is to be ninety feet wide and the lower level sixty feet. The structure is to have a clear span between the abutments of 220 feet. The upper level is to be used by pleasure vehicles and the lower level is to carry heavy traffic.

The total cost of the entire improvement, including land to be taken, is estimated at about $7,000,000. The cost of the bridge, elevated structure, walls and excavations, pavements, lighting and bridge machinery alone, without land damages, is estimated at $2,293,247. The greater part of the cost will be met by assessments on the property benefited.

Appraisal of the land and buildings to be taken in whole or in part for the improvement was completed in September, 1915, and it was announced that fifty-two holders of real estate would receive $4,942,088 as awards from the city. When the awards have been confirmed by the County court the actual construction of the boulevard link will begin.

CHICAGO TUBERCULOSIS SANITARIUM.

North Crawford and Bryn Mawr Avenues.

The Chicago Municipal Tuberculosis sanitarium was established in accordance with the provisions of an act of the state legislature, approved March 7, 1908. A proposal for the levying of an annual tax of 1 mill on the dollar for such an institution was submitted to the voters of Chicago at the election of April 6, 1909, and was carried by a vote of 188,716 yeas to 39,287 nays. A site for the sanitarium was bought in February, 1911, at a cost of $150,000. It consists of 160 acres located within the city limits at the intersection of North Crawford and Bryn Mawr avenues on the northwest side. Up to the time of the dedication of the institution, Feb. 16, 1915, thirty-two buildings, including administration headquarters, an infirmary and concrete cottages for men and women, had been erected at a cost of $2,400,000. When the sanitarium was opened, March 9 of the same year, 650 beds for patients were available; the ultimate capacity is to be 950 beds, of which 650 will be for ambulant patients, 240 for children and 300 for infirmary patients.

The sanitarium is free to residents of Chicago. Patients are admitted only after the necessary examination has been made at one of the municipal tuberculosis dispensaries. These in 1915 were as follows:

North side—Chicago Polyclinic, 221 West Chicago avenue; Tuesdays and Fridays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.

South side—Postgraduate, 2400 Dearborn street; Tuesdays and Thursdays, 10 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 10 a. m. to 12 m.

Grand Crossing, 942 East 75th street; Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 5 p. m. Provident, 57 West 36th street; Mondays and Thursdays, 2:30 to 5:30 p. m. Stockyards, 738 West 47th street; Tuesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Downtown—Iroquois Memorial, 23 North Market street; Tuesdays, 7 to 10 p. m.; Saturdays, 2 to 5 p. m.

West side—St. Elizabeth, Blackhawk street and North Ashland avenue; Mondays and Thursdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Central Free, 1744 West Harrison street; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. West Side dispensary, Maxwell and Miller streets; Mondays and Tuesdays, 2 to 5 p. m.; Thursdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Southwest, 2406 West 22d street; Mondays and Thursdays, 1 to 4 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 1 to 3 p. m.; evening clinic, Thursdays, 7 to 9.

For the present only persons afflicted with tuberculosis in its curable stages are received at the sanitarium; others are cared for at the Oak Forest infirmary. Provision is made for extending the benefits of the institution into the homes of those suffering from the malady and nurses, instruction, medicines and attendance are furnished under proper rules and regulations.

The management of the affairs of the institution is vested in a board of three directors appointed by the mayor. It consisted, when the sanitarium was opened, of Theodore B. Sachs, M. D., president; George B. Young, M. D., secretary, and W. A. Wieboldt. The board, as originally constituted in 1909, was Harlow N. Higginbotham, president; Theodore B. Sachs, M. D., secretary, and William A. Evans, M. D.

SPECIAL SESSIONS OF THE ILLINOIS ASSEMBLY.

Two special sessions of the 49th general Illinois assembly were held. The first began Nov. 22, 1915, and adjourned sine die May 10, 1916. The second special session was held while the first was still technically in existence, beginning Jan. 11 and ending Feb. 14, 1916. The work done was chiefly amendatory of acts passed at the regular session, but included some new legislation of minor consequence. Money was voted to reimburse farmers for losses caused by the slaughtering of cattle on account of the foot and mouth disease and some changes in the direction of economy in elections were made by amending existing acts.

CENTENNIAL OF ADMISSION OF ILLINOIS.

The following resolution was adopted by the Illinois state senate Feb. 20 and concurred in by the house April 8, 1913:

"Whereas, Illinois was admitted to the union of states Dec. 3, 1818, the centennial anniversary thereof being rapidly approaching, and it being meet and fit that the state which has given of its sons so liberally to the progress of the nation and the world during the period of its statehood should fittingly observe its hundredth anniversary by a celebration which shall do honor to itself and to the nation;

"Resolved, by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, That a commission, consisting of five members of the senate and five members of the house of representatives of the forty-eighth general assembly, shall be appointed to have charge of the preliminary arrangements of such celebration to be held in Springfield, the state capital, on such centennial date, and to determine, as may be, the character and necessities of such celebration, and to report the result of its findings to the forty-ninth general assembly; such joint commission to hold its meetings in the city of Springfield at such time or times as may be necessary to successfully inaugurate such movement."

Subsequently by another joint resolution E. J. James, E. B. Greene and J. W. Garner of the University of Illinois and Mrs. Jessie Palmer Weber and Dr. Otto L. Schmidt of the Illinois Historical society were appointed as additional members of the committee. The sum of $10,000 was appropriated to defray the expenses of the commission.

At a meeting held in Springfield July 22 Senator Campbell S. Hearn was elected chairman and Mrs. Jessie Palmer Weber secretary. The following proposals were adopted:

1. Promotion of local celebrations throughout the state.
2. Holding of a state celebration at the capital, consisting of an exposition and a pageant illustrative of the social, economic and educational development of the state.

3. Preparation of a series of publications putting into permanent form the record of the state's progress in all lines of development.

4. Erection of a permanent memorial building for the use of the historical and educational departments of the state, where shall be preserved the historical relics of the state; containing a memorial hall where shall be placed statues of Illinois' illustrious men.

5. Erecting and unveiling of bronze statues of Lincoln and Douglas on the capitol grounds as provided for in bills enacted at the session of the legislature in 1913.

A comprehensive and elaborate plan was presented to the state commission by President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois. His suggestion, similar to that of the commission's, was to have chief celebrations in Springfield, at the University of Illinois, which completes its fiftyth year of organization in 1918, and in Chicago. Lesser celebrations are suggested for the county seats.

The centennial commission as organized in 1916 was as follows:

President—Dr. Otto L. Schmidt, Chicago.
Secretary—Mrs. Jessie Palmer Weber, Springfield.
Dr. Edward Bowe, Jacksonville; M. J. Dougherty, Galesburg; Nicholas S. Duncan, LaSalle; Oscar W. Eckland, Chicago; Rev. Royal W. Ennis, Hillsboro; Prof. Everts B. Greene, Urbana; Hugh S. Magill, Springfield; John Schultz, Beardstown; Judge Thomas F. Scully, Chicago; Rev. Frederick Siedenbach, Chicago; Dr. Charles H. Starkel, Belleville; John E. Traeger, Chicago; Peter A. Waller, Kewanee; Kent E. Keller, Ava.

The centennial building commission in 1916 consisted of the governor, secretary of state, superintendent of public instruction, president State Historical society, president board of trustees of historical library, Arthur M. Fitzgerald and George Pashfield, Jr., Springfield.

FREIGHT TUNNELS UNDER CHICAGO.

Underlying nearly all the streets in the central business section of Chicago are sixty miles of tunnels connecting the freight terminals of the railroads with commercial houses. The tunnels are provided with narrow-gauge (2 ft.) electric railroads equipped with electric locomotives and steel cars. These are used chiefly in transporting goods to and from railroad freight yards and in carrying coal to business houses. Excavated and waste material from new buildings is removed through the tunnels and disposed of, permitting the work of construction to go on without interruption. In 1914 the Chicago Utilities company, which now owns the tunnel system, had in operation 117 electric motors and 3,000 coal, freight and other cars. In addition it had charge of some 24,000 telephones.

The original franchise for the tunnel system was granted Feb. 20, 1893, to the Illinois Telephone and Telegraph company, which was organized in 1898 by A. G. Wheeler and associates for the purpose of establishing an independent telephone system. By an amendatory ordinance granted July 15, 1903, the company was given the right to construct and operate a subway system for the transportation of mail matter, newspapers, packages and freight generally. The tunnels are 19 feet below city datum or 33 feet below the surface of the streets, the trunk line tunnels being limited in size to 12 feet 9 inches in width by 14 feet in height, and the smaller ones to 6 feet in width and 7 feet 6 inches in height. Part of the tunnel system was put into operation Aug. 15, 1906, but the whole of it was not in use until Sept. 1, 1907.

The Illinois Telephone and Telegraph company was succeeded in October, 1903, by the Illinois Tunnel company, which was followed in November, 1904, by the Chicago Subway company. The property of the Subway company and underlying concerns was acquired in April, 1912, by the Chicago Utilities company, the authorized capital stock of which is $53,000,000.

INHERITANCE TAX IN ILLINOIS.

The Illinois law taxing gifts, legacies and inheritances was passed by the legislature in 1895 and amended in 1901. Its constitutionality was contested, but the United States Supreme court in a decision rendered Jan. 19, 1903, held it to be valid.

Under the provisions of this law all property, real, personal and mixed, which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of the state from any resident of the state or any one whose property is in this state to any person or persons is subject to a tax at the following rates: When the beneficial interests to any property or income therefrom shall pass to any father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, wife or widow of the son or the husband of the daughter, or any adopted child or children, or to any lineal descendant born in lawful wedlock, the rate of tax shall be $1 on every $100 of the clear market value of such property received by each person and at the same rate for any less amount, provided that any estate which may be valued at less than $20,000 shall not be subject to any such tax; and the tax is to be levied in the above cases only upon the excess of $20,000 received by each person.

When the property passes to any uncle, aunt, niece, nephew or any lineal descendant of the same the rate shall be $2 on every $100 in excess of $2,000.

In all other cases the rate shall be as follows: On each and every $100 of the clear market value of all property and at the same rate for any less amount: On all estates of $10,000 and less, $3; on all estates over $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, $4; on all estates over $20,000 and not exceeding $50,000, $5, and on all estates over $50,000, $6; provided, that an estate in the above case which may be valued at a less sum than $500 shall not be subject to any tax.

ILLINOIS PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

Under act of March 9, 1910, as amended by act of June 30, 1913.

DATES OF PRIMARIES.

A primary shall be held on the second Tuesday in April in every year in which a president of the United States is to be elected, for the purpose of electing delegates and alternate delegates to national nominating conventions and for the purpose of securing an expression of the sentiment and will of the party voters with respect to candidates for nomination for the office of president of the United States. A primary shall be held on the first Wednesday after the second Tuesday in September in every year in which officers are to be voted for on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of such year for the nomination of candidates for such offices as are to be voted for at such November election. Whenever the term "April primaries" is used it shall be construed as referring to both the foregoing primaries.

A primary shall be held on the last Tuesday in February in each year for the nomination of such officers as are to be voted for on the first Tuesday in April of such year.

A primary shall be held on the second Tuesday in March in each year for the nomination of such officers as are to be voted for on the third Tuesday in April of such year.

A primary shall be held on the first Wednesday after the second Tuesday in September, 1914, and every two years thereafter, for the nomination of candidates for senatorial offices and for the election of senatorial committeemen.

A primary for the nomination of all other officers, nominations for which are required to be made under the provisions of the act, shall be held three weeks preceding the date of the general election for such offices, respectively.

The polls shall be open from 6 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p. m.

Any person entitled to vote at such primary shall be entitled to absent himself from his work for two hours between the opening and closing of the polls without incurring loss of wages or salary, providing application shall have been made on the preceding day. The employer may specify the hours.

PETITIONS.

Petitions for nomination shall be signed:

For a state office, by not less than 1,000 nor more than 2,000 primary electors of his party.

For state senator or assemblyman, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified primary electors of his district.

For a congressional office, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified primary electors of his party in his congressional district.

For a judicial office, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified electors in the district.

For a county office, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified primary electors of his party cast at the last preceding general election in his county; if for the nomination for county commissioner of Cook county, then by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified primary electors of his party in his county in the division in which such person is a candidate for nomination.

For a city or village office, to be filled by the electors of the entire village, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the qualified primary electors of his party in his city or village; if for alderman, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the voters of his party in his ward.

For a senatorial committeeman, by at least ten of the primary electors of his party of the county where the senatorial district is coextensive with one county or is composed of more than one county; but in case the senatorial district is wholly within the territorial limits of one county, or partly within the territorial limits of one county and partly within the territorial limits of another county, then such petition shall be signed by at least ten of the primary electors of his party of his senatorial district.

For state central committeeman, by at least 100 of the primary electors of his party of his congressional district.

For a candidate for trustee of a sanitary district, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the primary electors of his party from such sanitary district.

For a candidate for clerk of the Appellate court, by at least one-half of 1 per cent of the primary electors of his party of the district.

For any other office, by at least ten primary electors of his party of the district or division for which nomination is made.

CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT OR SENATOR.

Any candidate for president of the United States or for United States senator may have his name printed upon the primary ballot of his political party by filing in the office of the secretary of state not more than sixty days and not less than thirty days prior to the date of the April primary, in any year, a petition signed by not less than 1,000 nor more than 2,000 primary electors of the party of which he is a candidate. Provided, That the vote for president of the United States shall be for the sole purpose of securing an expression of the sentiment and will of the party voters with respect to candidates for nomination, and the vote of the state at large shall be taken and considered as advisory to the delegates and alternates at large to the national convention of the respective political parties; and the vote of the respective congressional districts shall be taken and considered as advisory to the delegates and alternates of the congressional districts to the national conventions of the respective political parties.

DELEGATES TO NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Each person seeking to be elected as delegate or alternate delegate to the national nominating convention of his party shall file, along with his nominating petition, a statement in writing signed by him in which he shall state the name of the candidate of his choice for nomination for president of the United States, or, in lieu thereof, may file a statement to the effect that he has no preference. Any candidate for president for whom a preference is stated by any candidate for delegate or alternate delegate to a nominating convention may, at any time after the filing of such petition and before the name of such candidate is certified to the various county clerks for printing, file in the office of the secretary of state an instrument in writing disavowing the candidacy of the person who has so filed a nominating petition, and in case such candidate for president shall disavow the candidacy of the candidate for delegate or alternate delegate, the name of such candidate shall not be certified to the various county clerks for printing upon the official primary ballot.

CONVENTIONS.

On the first Monday after the April primary the county central committee of each political party shall meet at the county seat and organize, such meeting to be called the county convention. The county convention of each political party shall choose delegates to the congressional and state conventions of its party. Only precinct committeemen residing within a congressional district shall take part in the selection of delegates to a congressional convention. Each delegate to the county convention shall have one vote and one additional vote for each fifty or major fraction thereof of his party as cast in his precinct at the last general election.

All congressional conventions shall be held on the first Wednesday after the first Monday next succeeding the April primary. The congressional convention of each political party shall have power to select delegates to national nominating convention and to recommend to the state convention of its party the nomination of candidate or candidates from such congressional district for elector or electors of president and vice-president of the United States.

All state conventions shall be held on the first Friday after the first Monday next succeeding the April primary. The state convention of each political party shall have power to make nominations of candidates for the electors of president and vice-president of the United States, and for trustees of the University of Illinois, to adopt any party platform and to select delegates and alternates to the national nominating conventions.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN ILLINOIS.

Under the state law of 1913 women in Illinois may vote for presidential electors, members of the state board of equalization, clerk of the Appellate court, county collector, county surveyor, members of board of assessors, members of board of review, sanitary district trustees and for all the officers of cities, villages and towns (except police magistrates), municipal judges and upon all questions or propositions submitted for approval at elections. They may also vote for the following township officers: Supervisor, town clerk, assessor, collector and highway commissioner.

Women voters must be citizens of the United States, 21 years of age or more, resident in the state one year, in the county ninety days and in the election district thirty days next preceding the election. Women must register in the same manner as male voters.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO STATE CONSTITUTION.

To amend article 9 of the constitution by adding thereto an additional section, to be known as section 14 of article 9, so as to give the general assembly powers over the subject-matter of taxation of personal property as complete and unrestricted as they would be if sections one (1), three (3), nine (9) and ten (10) of said article 9 of the constitution did not exist, provided, that taxes upon personal property must be uniform as to persons and property of the same class within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same and all exemptions from taxation to be by general law and to be revocable by the general assembly at any time. Yes, 658,298; no, 292,728.

PASSENGER SUBWAY SYSTEM FOR CHICAGO.

DIAGRAM OF PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM IN CENTRAL SECTION OF CHICAGO.

The Chicago traction and subway commission, consisting of William Barclay Parsons, Robert Ridgway and Blon J. Arnold, engineers, made a report, Dec. 4, 1916, favoring the immediate construction of tunnels and elevated roads to cost $96,371,300. The program included the following main features:

The building of a north and south subway under State street, swallowing elevated trains at 18th street and disgorge them at Chicago avenue.

The digging of a horseshoe loop subway for the west side surface cars which would carry them under Jackson boulevard, Michigan avenue and Washington street.

The construction of a new north and south elevated line in Ashland avenue.

The extension of the Logan square elevated to Irving Park boulevard and of the Humboldt park elevated to Grand avenue.

An enlargement of the present elevated loop which would complete the facilities for a complete rerouting of elevated trains through the loop.

The initial building program for convenience is divided into three periods of three years each, construction being assumed to begin in the summer of 1917. This date was determined on the assumption that the plans would be accepted promptly.

FIRST PERIOD, 1917-1920.

(Costs estimated.)

1. Commence immediately the construction of a two-track subway under State street, from a junction with the South Side elevated at 18th street and running thence north to Chicago avenue, thence west to a junction with the Northwestern elevated structure. Cost, $10,350,000.

2. Construct surface car subways under Washington street and Jackson street to Michigan avenue, or Grant park, connecting with the existing west side street car tunnels. Cost, $7,181,750.

3. Lengthen platforms on elevated stations, taking first the lines with the present heaviest traffic so as to obtain additional capacity at the earliest possible date. Cost, $1,306,400.

4. Construct immediately a two-track elevated extension south from Van Buren street over 5th avenue and east over Polk and 8th streets, connecting with South Side elevated. Cost, $810,060.

5. Extend the present stub terminal over North Water street east to State street and south on State to the present loop station over Lake street, including a new river bridge on State street. Cost, $1,029,940.

6. Extend Market street elevated line south from Madison street to connect with the 5th avenue terminal of the Metropolitan elevated, including additions to 5th avenue terminal. Cost, $658,030.

7. Add fourth track to South Side elevated from the 18th street junction with the new subway to 43d street and a third track extending from 43d street, including real estate for right of way. Cost, $3,926,100.

8. Add third and fourth tracks to Oak Park elevated from Market street to Paulina street. Cost, $1,361,600.

9. Add a third track on Metropolitan elevated from Lake street to Robey street and rebuild Lake street junction to form a physical connection and allow running of Logan and Humboldt trains over Lake street east of this junction. Cost, $1,196,000.

10. Add a third track on Douglas park branch from Marshfield avenue station to 20th street. Cost, $673,500.

11. Allow for terminal transfers from surface to elevated lines in this period. Cost, $1,026,950.

12. Add a third track connection on Northwestern elevated from Wilson avenue to existing third track north of Argyle. Cost, $115,000.

13. Add a third track on Oak Park elevated from Paulina street to Campbell avenue in order to complete an express track from Crawford avenue to river. Cost, $290,950.

14. Add a third track on Garfield branch from Marshfield avenue to Sacramento boulevard for express service to this point. Cost, $879,750.

15. Construct a new two-track line from Logan square to Irving Park boulevard, including new terminal yards at the latter point. Cost, $2,201,100.

16. Construct a new two-track line as an extension of the Humboldt park branch to Grand avenue, with terminal yards. Cost, $871,700.

17. Construct a new two-track surface line connecting Oak Park and Garfield park branches beyond their present western terminals, including storage yards in Forest Park. Cost, $701,500.

18. Construct a new two-track elevated structure on or parallel to Ashland avenue, from 20th street on the Douglas park branch to 69th street and Ashland avenue, including terminal yards. Cost, $5,944,350.

19. Construct a new two-track elevated connection between the new Ashland avenue branch and the Englewood and the stockyards branches. Cost, $430,100.

20. Construct Marshfield avenue junction to eliminate grade crossings and to allow of improved transfer facilities. Cost, $345,000.

21. Realign tracks and construct a new station at Division street on the Northwestern. Cost, $533,500.

Fifteen per cent for engineering, legal expenses, contingencies and interest during construction has been allowed in each of the above items.

22. Rolling stock required for additional rapid transit lines, including overhead. Cost, $9,497,000.

23. Surface lines requirements, additional tracks, rolling stock, etc., including overhead. Cost, $3,417,420.

Total estimated cost, first three-year period, $60,553,000.

The above estimate does not include the cost of power houses or substations for rapid transit lines, but does include substations for surface lines, it being assumed that the corporation will continue to purchase all its power.

Contracts for the purchase of power are now outstanding with the surface lines until 1927, subject to revision or termination by the railway companies in 1922, and with the elevated lines until 1937. If these contracts are extended the extensions should be subject to approval by the board of supervision and control.

The assumed operating ratio used in the financial plan following has been taken at a figure to cover the cost of this purchased power.

The program assumes an immediate start on construction of all possible items. Certain parts of the elevated construction can be completed in advance of the subways, which are estimated to take probably three years. Operation of these parts will afford greatly increased rapid transit capacity through the central business district, which, in turn, will enable more trains to be operated on the outlying branches. These additional trains can be made express as rapidly as the third and fourth tracking can be completed, materially reducing the running time to and from the outlying districts.

SECOND PERIOD, 1921-1923.

1. Construct a surface car subway from 14th street and Indiana avenue connected with the proposed Illinois Central station to and under Grant park or Michigan avenue to connect with the other surface car subways. Cost, $2,185,000.

2. Eliminate grade crossings on 5th avenue side of union loop and rearrange stations for new operation. Cost, $791,200.

3. Complete the realignment of the Northwestern tracks at Halsted street and North avenue to reduce the delays on account of heavy curvature. Cost, $632,500.

4. Add a third track to Ravenswood branch of the Northwestern elevated and eliminate grade crossing at Clark street. Cost, $1,273,000.

5. Add a fourth track to the South Side elevated from 43d street to 63d street. Cost, $1,124,700.

6. Add a fourth track to the Metropolitan elevated from Lake street to Robey street. Cost, $787,750.

7. Add a fourth track to the Metropolitan elevated from Marshfield avenue station to 20th street. Cost, $724,500.

8. Add a third track to Logan square branch from Robey street to Logan square. Cost, $715,300.

9. Add a third track on the Oak Park elevated from Crawford avenue to Laramie avenue. Cost, $402,500.

10. Add a third track to the Garfield park branch from Sacramento boulevard to Laramie avenue. Cost, $1,002,800.

11. Add a third track to Douglas park branch from 20th street to Clifton park station. Cost, $947,600.

12. Complete the connections between Oak Park and Garfield park branches and storage yards. Cost, $448,500.

13. Construct the connection from Robey street on the Logan square branch to the Ravenswood branch at Roscoe street. Cost, $1,958,450.

14. Add a third track to the Metropolitan elevated from Marshfield avenue station to Lake street. Cost, $287,500.

Fifteen per cent for contingencies, engineering, legal expense and interest during construction have been included in each of the above items.

15. Rolling stock for rapid transit lines, including overhead. Cost, $3,217,000.

16. Surface line requirements, additional tracks, rolling stock, etc., including overhead. Cost, $8,013,000.

Total estimated cost, second three-year period, $24,516,300.

By the end of this period the improvements recommended in the first and second periods will raise the capacity of the rapid transit system 50 per cent over 1916 rush-hour scheduled car trips (making it two and one-half times present capacity), or 124 per cent on lines serving the central business district, and will increase the extent of the express service very materially beyond that of the first period, with corresponding reduction in running time.

INCREASED RUSH-HOUR CAPACITY.

(End of second period—1923.)

	Scheduled Ultimate car trips, under plan, inc.	Pct.
Metropolitan and Oak Park	559	1,235
Northwestern	364	760
South Side	305	760
Ashland (through)	...	320
Total	1,228	3,075

The new territory reached by extensions in the first period will in particular be benefited by the additional express service. In laying out the above construction program effort has been made to construct the extensions, additional express tracks, terminal and transfer facilities in progressive steps to distribute the benefits in a uniform manner over the entire city system. The limits to the construction program are those imposed by the earning capacity outlined in the financial plan, which in turn depends on the traffic reasonably to be anticipated from these additions and extensions of the service.

This will give a rapid transit system which will serve directly nearly two-thirds of the city's population at present located, assuming a reasonable walking distance. A large part of the remainder will be served by transfers from surface to rapid transit lines at convenient points.

THIRD PERIOD, 1924-1926.

The expenditures in the third period are for additions to the rolling stock of both the rapid transit and surface lines and extensions of the surface lines, principally as feeders in the outlying districts to the rapid transit system developed in the first two periods. Estimated cost, including overhead, $11,302,000.

The grand total cash requirements for the above schedules of the three construction periods are $96,371,300.

Duties—The bureau of statistics being in the department of the mayor, the city statistician does whatever work may be assigned him from the mayor's office, and he supplies data on municipal subjects to the aldermen and heads of departments whenever such are required of him. And he renders like service to the general public upon call, or letter received, from any person residing in Chicago or elsewhere.

MUNICIPAL REFERENCE LIBRARY.

Room 1005 city hall.

Municipal Reference Librarian—Frederick Rex.

Stenographer—Kathryn Scully.

Library Assistant—Edith I. Bredin.

Duties—The Municipal Reference library is the city hall branch of the Chicago public library. Its function is to provide, arrange and render available for the use of the members of the Chicago city council, its various committees and municipal department and bureau heads public reports and other data bearing upon the legislative and administrative projects before them. All laws and ordinances of other cities or states bearing upon the questions before the city council are secured and this material is analyzed, indexed and prepared so that it will be readily at hand. The library keeps on file material of a local character bearing on local questions and collects and compiles statistical information relating to the activities of all branches of the municipal government. All reports printed or published by the different governing bodies in the city of Chicago or any of the departments or bureaus of the municipal government are kept on file. The library possesses one of the most complete collections of the charters and ordinances of domestic and foreign cities extant in the United States. A large number of municipal journals and magazines are received and an index is made of all ordinances pending before the city council of Chicago and other cities. If any information desired is not on file an effort is always made to secure it as promptly as possible.

GERMAN.

Teachers of German receive $5.00 per school month extra for such teaching.

EXTRA TEACHERS.

Each elementary school having a membership of more than 2,000 pupils is allowed one extra teacher, and schools having a membership of less than 2,000 and more than 1,400 are allowed one extra teacher half time, who is paid according to the primary schedule (elementary) lower group.

The salary of such extra teacher in all cases begins at the first year of the lower group and advances upon said schedule according to years of service, as in the case of regular teachers, but does not advance beyond the maximum of the lower group.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

The Chicago public library is a free public institution, established under the Illinois library law of 1872. It derives its revenue from an annual library tax of approximately one mill. A board of directors of nine members is appointed by the mayor, three annually for terms of three years. The library occupies the site formerly known as Dearborn park, bounded by Michigan avenue, Washington street, Garland court and Randolph street. The cost of the building was about $2,000,000, including the furniture, book stacks and machinery. There are thirty-five branches, five high school branches and 169 delivery stations.

The right of drawing books from the public library belongs to all who reside in the city of Chicago, and also to those who make their homes in the suburbs within the limits of Cook county and are regularly employed in the city. In order to become a book borrower it is necessary only to file an application giving the name and residence of the applicant and bearing the signature of a second person, who must be an actual resident of the city, appearing as such in the latest city directory. This person becomes the guarantor to the library for the proper observance of the library regulations on the part of the applicant. These regulations merely provide that books drawn for home use must be returned within the stated period and must not be defaced or injured.

At the close of May 31, 1916, the public library contained 705,579 volumes. The aggregate circulation for the year ending May 31, 1916, was 4,802,432 volumes, which does not include the use of books kept on the open shelves at the main library or its branches or the periodicals or newspapers used in the reading rooms. This use would bring the total recorded book issue to

CHICAGO BUREAU OF PUBLIC EFFICIENCY.

Organized in 1910.
 Trustees—Julius Rosenwald, chairman; Alfred L. Baker, treasurer; Onward Bates, George G. Tunell, Walter L. Fisher, A. B. Pond, Victor Elting, Frank I. Moulton.
 Director—Harris S. Keeler.
 Headquarters—City Club building, 315 Plymouth court.

The purposes of the organization are:

- (1) To scrutinize the systems of accounting in the eight local governments of Chicago.
- (2) To examine the methods of purchasing materials and supplies and letting and executing construction contracts in these bodies.

(3) To examine the pay rolls of these local governing bodies with a view of determining the efficiency of such expenditures.

(4) To make constructive suggestions for improvements in the directions indicated under 1, 2 and 3, and to co-operate with public officials in the installation of these improved methods.

(5) To furnish the public with exact information regarding public revenues and expenditures and thereby promote efficiency and economy in the public service.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANK.

The postal savings bank was opened at the main postoffice, Chicago, Aug. 1, 1911. Any one 10 years old or over may open an account. No account may be opened for less than $1, nor will fractions of a dollar be accepted for deposit. Depositors are now allowed to deposit a total of $1,000, any part or all of which may be deposited in any month.

Deposits are evidenced by postal savings certificates issued in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50 and $100.

Depositors of the postal savings system by applying therefor thirty days in advance may exchange the whole or a part of their deposits on Jan. 1 or July 1 of each year for United States registered or coupon bonds in denominations of $20, $100 and $500, bearing interest at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after one year from the date of issue, both principal and interest payable twenty years from that date in United States gold coin.

Postal savings banks have also been established at the following postal stations: Armour, Auburn Park, Austin, C. Canal, Chicago Avenue, Chicago Lawn, Cragin, D. FIELD MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY.

President—Stanley Field.
 Vice-Presidents—Martin A. Ryerson, Watson F. Blair.
 Director of the Museum and Secretary—Frederick J. V. Skiff.
 Treasurer—Solomon A. Smith.
 Assistant Secretary and Recorder—D. C. Davies.

The Field Museum of Natural History, established in 1894 at the close of the World's Columbian exposition of 1893, occupies the temporary building erected for fine arts in Jackson park, the exposition site. The founding of a scientific institution of this character in Chicago was made possible by the gift of $1,000,000 by Marshall Field, who on his death (Jan. 16, 1906) bequeathed the institution a further $3,000,000, $4,000,000 for the erection of a permanent building and $4,600,000 for endowment. In addition $1,200,000 has been donated by other individuals and there is an annual income from other sources than endowment of about $25,000. The citizens of Chicago have conferred legislative provision for the levy of a tax for the maintenance of the museum when a new building shall have been erected, which it is estimated will eventually produce approximately $100,000 per annum.

Plans have been completed and erection has begun of a new building for the museum near and south of 12th street extended in an easterly direction. The architecture of this building will be ornamental and dignified in character, as befits its location in a public park. The general architecture of the present building in Jackson park has been retained as well as the beautiful effect of the colonnade structure.

The nucleus of the exhibition material was gathered by gift and purchase at the World's Columbian exposition. Most of this material, however, has since been rearranged, readapted or discarded. Several departments created at the organization have been abandoned, until, after the lapse of twenty years and the expenditure of approximately $6,000,000, the museum is now divided into four departments—namely, anthropology, botany, geology and zoology. Many expeditions for the purpose of obtaining study, exhibition and exchange material and data have been dispatched to all parts of North America and to different countries. The results of these expeditions, investigations and researches have been published by the museum from time to time, which publications have been distributed to kindred societies and institutions both at home and abroad. Two courses of free lectures are given annually. An important contribution of $250,000 by Norman W. Harris was announced in December, 1911, for the extension of the work of the museum into the public schools of Chicago. The plans for carrying out Mr. Harris' wishes were placed in operation in the spring of 1913. The museum has a working library of about 69,000 titles, an extensive exchange system, fully equipped departmental laboratories, a herbarium of more than 500,000 sheets, study collections in mammals and birds reaching many thousand specimens, a large two story taxidermy section, a well equipped printing shop, illustration studios and assaying and lapidary rooms. In North American ethnology, in the world's mineralogy, in economic botany the museum is particularly prominent, while its series of mounted mammals furnishes examples of advanced museum methods. The present main building covers nine acres and is open to the public on all days except Christmas and Thanksgiving. An admission fee of 25 cents is charged except on Saturdays and Sundays, when admission is free to all. Students, scholars and teachers are admitted free on all days between 9 a. m. and 4 p. m.

The museum is incorporated under state law and the administrative control rests in a board of trustees with president, secretary, etc. The executive of the museum is the director, under whom there are four head curators with divisional assistant curators, preparators, etc. The entire museum records, the accessions system, the historical files, publications and supplies are in charge of a recorder.

CHICAGO'S BRIDGE SYSTEM.

The first ferry across the river was established in 1829, where the Lake street bridge now is. In 1833 a floating bridge of logs was in operation just north of the present Randolph street bridge. A foot bridge over the north branch was built in 1832 at Kinzie street. The first drawbridge over the main branch of the river was placed at Dearborn street in 1834. In 1854 a pivot bridge was built at Clark street. These and other bridges of that time were built by the persons most directly benefited by them. It was not until 1857 that a bridge was built entirely at the city's expense. This was the structure over the south branch at Madison street. It cost $30,000. Until 1872 the swing bridges were turned by hand, but in the year named steam power was installed on the Dearborn street structure and later on most of the other bridges in the downtown section were similarly equipped. In 1895 the Rush, Lake and Van Buren street bridges were operated by electric motors. The last named structure, which was opened for traffic in that year, was the first of the Scherzer rolling type. The Halsted street lift bridge, the first and only one of its kind, was opened in 1894 and was operated by steam. It cost the city $242,800.

In 1916 Chicago had fifty bridges with movable spans and twenty-two with fixed spans. There were also thirty-seven viaducts and seven foot bridges. Most of the movable bridges are operated by electricity. The bridges and viaducts had a value of more than $5,000,000.

MUSIC IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Founded by Theodore Thomas.

The Theodore Thomas orchestra was organized in Chicago in 1890-1891 by a number of men interested in promoting the highest class of instrumental music. The Orchestral association was incorporated Dec. 16, 1890, and Theodore Thomas, famous for many years as a conductor, was engaged to lead the new organization, which was then named the Chicago orchestra. The preparations were completed in 1891 and the first public rehearsal was given at the Auditorium Friday afternoon, Oct. 16, of that year. Financially the result of the first season was discouraging, the fifty or more gentlemen guaranteeing the expenses being compelled to meet a deficit of about $53,000. Receipts, however, continued to increase from year to year until the orchestra was finally placed on a permanent basis. This was accomplished when Orchestra hall, erected by subscriptions from more than 8,000 persons, was erected at 220 South Michigan avenue, and the organization was provided with a home of its own. The first concert there was given Wednesday evening, Dec. 14, 1904. Theodore Thomas died Jan. 4, 1905, and the orchestra, which until then had been called the Chicago orchestra, was named the Theodore Thomas orchestra. Feb. 24, 1913, the title was changed to the Chicago Symphony orchestra (founded by Theodore Thomas). Frederick Stock, after the death of Mr. Thomas, was made conductor, a position he still holds. The plan of giving two performances a week—a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon and a concert on Saturday evening—has been followed from the beginning. The season consists of twenty-eight weeks, beginning in October and ending in April.

The first officers of the Orchestral association were: N. K. Fairbank, president; C. Norman Fay, vice-president; P. A. McEwan, treasurer and secretary; Milward Adams, manager.

MANAGEMENT (1916-1917).

General Director—Cleofonte Campanini.

Business Comptroller—Herbert M. Johnson.
Secretary to Director—Julius Daiber.

CIVIC MUSIC ASSOCIATION.

Founded 1913.

President—William H. Rehm.

First Vice-President—John Allen Haines.

Second Vice-President—Angus S. Hibbard.

Secretary—Mrs. Frederick W. Upham.

Treasurer—Charles L. Hutchinson.

Superintendent—Miss Frances F. Brundage.

Office—539, 410 South Michigan avenue.

The purpose of the organization is to promote and encourage the understanding, appreciation and study of the art of music and the development of musical talent throughout the community, principally by providing musical entertainment and instruction, gratuitously or at little expense, in the small parks and playgrounds and other civic centers. It is supported by "popular subscription" in the way of $2 memberships and larger contributions from individuals and organizations. LINCOLN PARK SYSTEM.

Commissioners (appointed by governor with consent of senate)—Timothy J. O'Byrne, A. F. Bruchman, Bernard Jung, N. N. Lampert, William Rehm, Bertram M. Winston, John P. Friedlund.

Officers—President, Timothy J. O'Byrne; vice-president, Nelson N. Lampert; auditor, John P. Friedlund; secretary, George D. Crowley; superintendent, Edwin A. Kaust; attorney, Francis O'Shaughnessy; treasurer, Frederick H. Rawson.

Office—In Lincoln park near Clark and Center streets.

The Lincoln park district consists of the towns of North Chicago and Lake View, with Fullerton avenue as the dividing line, and is bounded on the north by Devon avenue, on the south by the Chicago river, and extends from Lake Michigan on the east to the north branch of the river and North Western avenue on the west.

The area of the Lincoln park district is 12.64 square miles. The total area of the parks and boulevards is 642.63 acres, with 11.755 miles of boulevards.

Lincoln Park—Lincoln park, previously known as Lake park, began its history under its present name by resolution passed by the common council of Chicago under date of June 5, 1865. The park proper is 317 acres in extent and extends from Diversey boulevard to Oak street along the lake front. To this 200.59 acres of land has been added by filling in Lake Michigan north of Diversey boulevard. This extension contains a 57 acre yacht harbor. The park contains a large floral department, also an extensive zoological garden containing about 1,800 animals. Boating and bathing facilities are furnished and the park lagoon—one mile in length—gives an admirable course for racing. The Academy of Sciences is located in the park at the foot of Center street. This building was erected in 1893 and contains about 250,000 specimens. It is noted for its collection of local natural history specimens and for its complete collection of mollusks. The park has provided facilities for outdoor games during both the winter and summer seasons.

Stanton Park—At Vedder, Vine and Rees streets; area 4.78 acres; equipped with fieldhouse and outdoor gym facilities.

Lake Shore Playground—Area 9.16 acres; is situated between Pearson street and Chicago avenue, extending from the Chicago avenue pumping works to the lake. This park is fitted up as a playground, containing a shelter house, and with outdoor gymnasium apparatus.

Seward Park—Contains 1.78 acres; is fitted with outdoor and indoor gymnasium and has a fieldhouse which contains reading rooms, assembly hall, clubrooms, a branch of the public library and facilities for gymnastic work and aquatic sports.

Hamlin Park—Wellington avenue and Robey street; area 8.64 acres; is fully equipped with fieldhouse and out-of-door gymnasium facilities.

Welles Park—Western avenue and Montrose boulevard; area 8.17 acres.

Union Square—Goethe street on the north and Astor street on the west; area .46 acre.

TRISTATE RACING CRUISE.

The annual tristate racing cruise of the Chicago Yacht club was sailed June 23, 24 and 25, 1916, the course being as usual from Chicago to Michigan City, Ind., thence to St. Joe, Mich., and back to Chicago. The contest was won by the Snite-Barcel class P sloop Intrepid. The run from Chicago was made by the Intrepid in 5:07:15 elapsed time, or 4:28:42 corrected time. The second leg from Michigan City to St. Joe was won by Harry Higinbotham's Priscilla, which made the run in 5:16:30. The third leg from St. Joe to Chicago was won by the Intrepid, which made the run in 9:36:55 elapsed time, or 8:56:20 corrected time.

THE LIPTON CUP.

There were no contests in 1914, 1915 or 1916 for the silver cup donated by Sir Thomas Lipton to the Columbia Yacht club of Chicago, to be competed for annually by 21 foot cabin class yachts. The races for the America's cup having been postponed at the request of the challenger on account of the war in Europe, in which his country was a participant, the Columbia Yacht club deemed it an act of courtesy to postpone the Lipton cup contest likewise.

MOTORING.

Aside from the racing on the Maywood speedway the interest of the Chicago motoring world centered on the outcome of the ninth annual interclub reliability team match between the Chicago Athletic association and the Chicago Automobile club. This occurred June 22-23, 1916, and consisted of a run to Indianapolis, Ind., and return to Chicago. The team representing the Athletic association took first honors, with only 277 penalization points as compared with 605 marked up against the Automobile club team.

Al Schillo, driving a Mercer, won the title of master driver of the Chicago Automobile club, Oct. 19, by checking in at Peoria with a perfect score after a run of 185 miles under adverse weather and road conditions. The run was to have been extended to Clinton, Ia., but impassable roads caused the plan to be given up.

HORSE RACING.AMERICAN DERBY.

The American Derby, formerly run at the Washington park racetrack, was renewed in 1916 at the Hawthorne racetrack, when Dodge, carrying 126 pounds and ridden by F. Murphy, won in 2:04½. CHICAGO STREET GRADES.

The grade of the streets in the central portion of Chicago has been raised three times. In 1855 it was raised from 2 to 3 feet above the then existing surface, and it was again raised by about the same amount in 1857 and 1872, making the present level fourteen feet above "city datum," which is the low-water mark of the lake in 1847.

RATES OF FARE FOR TAXICABS.

Fixed by Chicago city ordinances. Sight-seeing cars and autobuses having a capacity of eight persons or more not included.

I. RATES BY DISTANCE.

For first half-mile (or fraction thereof) for one person.....40 cents
 For each succeeding quarter-mile (or fraction thereof).....10 cents
 For each additional person for the whole journey.....15 cents
 For each four minutes of waiting (or fraction thereof).....10 cents
 Waiting time shall include (a) the time during which the taxicab is not in motion, beginning ten minutes after call time at the place to which it has been called; (b) the time consumed by unavoidable delay at street crossings or bridges, and (c) the time consumed while standing at the direction of the passenger.

No charge shall be made (a) for time lost for inefficiency of the taxicab or its operator, or (b) for time consumed by the premature arrival in response to a call.

II. HOUR RATES.

For trip of two miles or more.

Car seating two persons, $2.50; minimum charge for trip, $1.

Seating three to five persons, $3.50; minimum charge for trip, $1.50.

Seating more than five persons, $4.50; minimum charge for trip, $2.

Where the trip is for two miles or more and the passenger at the time of hiring any such vehicle expressly elects, as such passenger may do, to pay therefor by the hour, the operator in charge of such vehicle shall supply the passenger with a card upon which shall appear the name of the owner, the name and license number of the operator and the exact time of the hiring, and the charge for such service, in the absence of such express agreement, shall not exceed the rates prescribed above as the "hour rate."

The rate of fare to be asked or demanded for such vehicles shall be determined in accordance with the time in which the vehicle is in use by the passenger or passengers engaging the same.

In determining the seating capacity of any such vehicle neither the operator's seat nor any portion thereof shall be computed, but the said capacity shall be determined by the number of persons which can be accommodated in the interior or tonneau of such vehicles.

No charge shall be made for the time consumed in responding to a call or in returning to the place from which such vehicle is called.

Baggage—Every passenger upon any public automobile, autocar or other similar vehicle shall be allowed to have conveyed with him upon such vehicle, without extra charge therefor, his ordinary light traveling baggage in an amount not to exceed fifty pounds. A fee of 20 cents may be charged for conveying a trunk.

Lost Baggage—Whenever any package, article of baggage or goods of any kind shall be left in or upon any vehicle licensed under the provisions of this article, the operator of such vehicle shall, upon discovery of such package, baggage or goods, forthwith deliver the same to the vehicle bureau, department of police, in the city hall.

CAB AND CARRIAGE FARES.

ONE-HORSE VEHICLES.

1. For one or two passengers, not exceeding one mile.....$0.50
 2. For each additional passenger, 25 cents for the first mile or part thereof only..... .25
 3. For one or more passengers for the second mile and subsequent miles or part thereof, 25 cents for all for each such mile or part thereof$0.25

4. For children between 5 and 14 years of age, when accompanied by an adult, not more than half of the above rates shall be charged for like distances. For children under 5 years of age, when accompanied by an adult, no charge shall be made.

5. For the use of any vehicle mentioned in this section conveying one or more passengers, when hired by the hour with the privilege of going from place to place and stopping as often as may be required, as follows:

For the first hour.....1.00

For each additional hour or part thereof at the rate of $1 an hour.

6. In the case of any vehicle described in this section being engaged by the hour and discharged at a distance from the place where it was engaged the driver shall have the right to charge for the time necessary to return to such place.

TWO-HORSE VEHICLES.

1. For one or two passengers not exceeding one mile.....$1.00

2. For each additional passenger, 50 cents each for the first mile or part thereof only. .50

3. For one or more passengers for the second mile and subsequent miles or part thereof, 50 cents for all for each mile or part thereof50

4. Children between 5 and 14 years of age, when accompanied by an adult, not more than half of the above rates shall be charged for like distances. For children under 5 years of age, when accompanied by an adult, no charge shall be made.

5. For the use of any vehicle mentioned in this section conveying one or more passengers, when hired by the hour with the privilege of going from place to place and stopping as often as may be required, as follows:

For the first hour.....2.00

For each additional hour or part thereof, at the rate of $1.50 an hour.

6. In the case of any vehicle described in this section being engaged by the hour and discharged at a distance from the place where it was engaged, the driver shall have the right to charge for the time necessary to return to such place.

Hiring by the Hour—Must be so specified at the time of hiring. In all cases where the hiring of any vehicle licensed under the provisions of this article is not at the time of such hiring specified by the person hiring same to be by the hour, it shall be deemed to be by the mile, and for any detention exceeding a total period of fifteen minutes during the whole period of such hiring, when so working by the mile, the driver may demand pay for such period of detention at the rate of $1.50 per hour in addition to the rate per mile.

Baggage—Every passenger upon any vehicle licensed under the provisions of this article shall be allowed to have conveyed with him upon such vehicle without charge therefor his ordinary light traveling baggage in an amount not to exceed in weight seventy-five pounds.

"CHICAGO'S BEST TEAMING SERVICE."

Willet Teaming Service Records.

1. CAPACITY—One three-horse, ball-bearing Willett wagon hauled in one load an entire carload of Stollwerck Bros. chocolate, weighing 37,253 lbs.

2. REGULARITY—The Willett paper teams for The Daily News, the Herald and the Tribune never vary, day in and day out, five minutes from their schedule time.

3. VOLUME—During the Christmas rush of 1915 Willett teams hauled for one firm in one day 624 loads of mail.

4. SPEED—Twice a week throughout the year, at the Rock Island Freight Depot, Willett teams empty an entire train of ten to twelve carloads within two hours after the cars are set for delivery.

5. FLEXIBILITY—Willet Teaming Service is as efficient for a one-box delivery as for an entire train-load. Twenty teams serve two hundred customers whose accounts average less than one dollar per day.

6. EQUIPMENT—Three hundred teams and motor trucks provide the proper variety of equipment; motors from one to ten thousand pounds capacity for long hauls; teams from one to twenty thousand pounds capacity for short hauls.

A. T. WILLET COMPANY

75 EAST SOUTH WATER STREET

RULES OF THE ROAD FOR MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES.

[From Chicago police ordinances.]

All vehicles shall keep as close to the right hand curb as prudence and safety shall permit, except when overtaking and passing another vehicle and except when running within car tracks. An overtaken vehicle must at all times be passed on its left side, except that in case of motor vehicles and motorcycles passing street cars or other vehicles when running within the car tracks; in such case such motor vehicle or motorcycle shall not turn to the left into the track reserved for street cars and vehicles moving in the opposite direction, but shall pass to the right of such street car or vehicle so overtaken.

Vehicles upon overtaking any street car which is stopped for the purpose of discharging or taking on passengers must not approach nearer than ten feet of it nor pass it while it is so stopped.

No vehicle, unless in charge of a driver, is permitted to stand more than 30 minutes in any street or alley in the district bounded by Lake street, Wabash avenue, Harrison and Market streets.

Mufflers and horns or bells are required on all automobiles and motorcycles. Light showing license number to be controlled from outside. Headlights must not be so bright as to dazzle or confuse.

No vehicle shall proceed at a speed greater than the law allows and which is safe and proper under the conditions obtaining. The state law prohibits a speed greater than ten miles an hour in business and fifteen miles an hour in residence districts of cities and villages.

No vehicle shall cross any street at a speed exceeding one-half its legal speed.

No vehicle shall emerge from any alley, stable or garage at a pace faster than a walk.

On all thoroughfares the heavy and slow moving vehicles shall, as far as conditions permit, keep to the right, to allow the rapid moving and lighter traffic to proceed independently.

A vehicle meeting another shall turn to the right.

A vehicle turning into another street to the right shall turn the corner as near the right hand curb as possible.

A vehicle turning into another street to the left shall circle around the center of the street intersection.

A vehicle crossing from one side of the street to the other shall keep to the right.

No vehicle shall stop with the left side to the curb.

No vehicle shall stand backed up to the curb except when actually loading or unloading.

No vehicle shall, except in emergencies, stop in any street or highway except near the right hand curb so as not to obstruct a crossing.

No vehicle shall back to make a turn in any street if by so doing it interferes with other vehicles, but shall go around the block or to a street wide enough to turn in without blocking the traffic.

Vehicles will enter north and south alleys and all L-shaped alleys from the north and leave from the south; east and west alleys from the east and leave from the west.

Horse drawn vehicles have the right of way over power driven vehicles, street cars excepted.

Motor vehicles are not permitted to stand within fifteen feet of a hydrant.

WEBB'S Gas Roasted Coffee

Did you ever drink a cup of coffee which you pronounced excellent?

We have made arrangements whereby all readers of The Daily News Almanac can get the coffee from their retail dealer in one, two and three pound tins under the Trade Mark Blend

carry it, insist upon his getting it through our Dept. A.*

Our years of experience and complete equipment devoted to producing the highest degree of perfection in the art of coffee blending insure the utmost satisfaction to the consumer.

Lowest Hauling Cost on Earth

Smith Form-a-Truck
$350 and a Ford.

In all lines of business—large and small—from coast to coast, Smith Form-a-Truck has established records of economy unequaled by any other form of hauling.

Think what these every day service records mean: 12 to 15 miles per gallon of gasoline; 6,000 to 8,000 miles per set of tires; 10 to 15 miles per hour.

Smith Form-a-Truck will do the work of four teams at half the cost. Yet it costs no more than a single team and a set of harness.

And there is practically no repair cost. The first Smith Form-a-Truck was sold in Sumner, Wash., four years ago. It has already run 13,000 miles in everyday service, carrying average loads of 2,200 pounds. And the total cost of repairs has been less than $8.00.

It is but natural, then, that entire fleets of Smith Form-a-Trucks are now being used by such firms as Morris & Co., Cudahy, Armour, Montgomery Ward, Standard Oil Co., Butler Paper Co., Fleischmann Yeast Co., United States Mail contractors and scores of equally prominent concerns. Thousands are in daily use on farms and in small business houses.

Let Smith Form-a-Truck turn your delivery expense into an asset—extend your business zone—develop better service. Our transportation engineers are at your service.

Suite 986 Smith Form-a-Truck Bldg.

Chicago, Illinois.

The shadow illustration shows the Ford Power Plant, to which the Smith Form-a-Truck is bolted with a viselike grip.

The heavy illustration shows the Smith Form-a-Truck adjusted to the Ford Power Plant—it carries 90 per cent of the load.

UNION STOCKYARDS, CHICAGO.

The Union stockyards of Chicago, occupying its present site since 1885, is the largest live stock market in the world. Its yard area of 500 acres contains approximately 13,000 pens, which have a daily capacity for 75,000 cattle, 150,000 sheep, 300,000 hogs and 6,000 horses.

Since the Union stockyards of Chicago were established there have been received and sold on this market a grand total of more than 550,000,000 animals for an aggregate sum of $10,700,000,000, for every dollar's worth of which sales there was an actual delivery of the property.

For the past ten years an average yearly total of over 16,000,000 animals was sold for the stupendous annual average sum of over $350,000,000. That means that a general average of considerably more than $1,000,000 worth of living property was sold and delivered every business day during the last ten years on the Chicago live stock market. These figures do not embrace the enormous daily transactions of "Packing-town," which are second in magnitude only to those of the Union stockyards proper.

More than twenty-six states supply Chicago with live stock and during the past ten years there have been sold and shipped alive more than 40 per cent of the cattle, 22½ per cent of hogs and 26 per cent of sheep, showing the constant healthy competition in buying live stock at Chicago.

The Chicago live stock market supplies the world with meats. Nowhere is there such a demand for live animals. Packers buy thousands of carloads on other markets and ship them to Chicago for slaughter, and speculators buy and ship them to Chicago for sale.

The city of Chicago alone consumes more than 400,000,000 pounds of meats per year, equal to 300,000 head of cattle annually, and her packers send millions of tons of meat annually to the four corners of the earth.

Eastern buyers, exporters, independent local slaughterers and country feeder buyers constantly compete with the larger packers for the daily offerings. The Union stockyards of Chicago receives the greatest number of animals and has the largest number of buyers to purchase and use them.

CHICAGO SCHOOL CENSUS OF MARCH 27, 1916.

TOTAL POPULATION.

Taking the minor population conservative multiple, which proved to be the only one successfully close to the actual federal enumeration of the total population in 1910, Mr. Bodine estimated the total population of all ages in Chicago in 1916 at 2,550,000. This would be an increase of 112,474, as compared with the school census of 1914, which covered all-ages and showed a total population of 2,437,526. Mr. Bodine pointed out that the ratio of increase in both the minor and total population had been appreciably retarded in the two years by the decrease in immigration from Europe, by the return of many foreign born parents to take part in the war, by the trend of many families to the suburbs close to Chicago but outside the city limits where they could not be included in the census, and by the growth of apartment houses with limited space.

MINOR POPULATION SINCE 1906.

DEAF, BLIND, CRIPPLED AND ILLITERATE MINORS.

There were in 1916 567 deaf children in the city and 182 minors who were blind, or nearly so. There are 126 more who have visual defects leading to the sightless life.

The city had 645 crippled minors of whom 210 were so incapacitated that they were eligible for transportation service to the crippled children's centers. There were 2,086 so called "subnormal" minors in the entire city, including those feeble-minded, mentally backward or having mental defects. Returns from special divisions in the public schools make a complete count of this class of children possible. Chicago has 221 mutes.

The illiterates over 12 and under 21, mostly between 16 and 21, total 573, who cannot read or write.

ALBAUGH-DOVER

15-30 SQUARE TURN TRACTOR

—Plows close up to the fence corners.

—Turns a square corner in field in five seconds.

—Cleans up at the finish better than you can with a team.

—Travels either way at full speed and power.

—Has a four-plow power plant on a three-plow tractor, giving a big surplus of power.

—Has no clutch, no differential and no transmission gears.

—Has a special floating hitch and power lift for plows operated by a touch of the foot.

WRITE FOR OUR TRACTOR CATALOG

If you are interested in power farming we will be glad to mail you a copy of our new catalog explaining in detail the many advantages of the "SQUARE TURN" TRACTOR. It was easily the sensation of the 1916 tractor shows. You can't afford to buy until you have investigated the many advantages it offers.

ELEVATION OF CHICAGO AND LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mean sea level or mean tide at New York is the standard plane to which all elevations in the United States are referred, and the figures here given are heights above that plane. They are from the official records of the United States lake survey which have been maintained since 1860. The monthly mean surface of Lake Michigan has varied from 583.57 in June, 1886, to 578.98 in December, 1895. The annual mean surface has varied from 582.96 in 1886 to 579.47 in 1896.

The actual fluctuations in water surface from which these means are obtained have a much larger range and the immediate change in a few hours is often as great as two feet. The mean level of Lake Michigan from 1860 to 1914 (the average of all monthly means) was 581.20, and for the period from 1860 to 1875 it was 581.63, indicating that the mean level remains about the same, although the daily, monthly and annual fluctuations may be quite large. The highest known monthly mean was in 1838—584.7—and the lowest was in 1819—573.0—these being somewhat indeterminate. The United States lake survey has adopted as a standard low water for reference of soundings on its charts 578.50, a little higher than the lowest ever known as a monthly mean.

The Chicago city datum is 579.94 and this plane is used in most local works, including the harbor improvements made by the United States. This is about one foot above the lowest monthly mean of recent years and 1.26 feet below the mean level 1860-1914.

For general purposes the level of Lake Michigan should be taken as being somewhere between 581 and 582 feet. The heights of land in Chicago vary from 580 to 652 (Galewood) but the average may be placed at about 600 feet. The downtown section runs from 586 to 593 feet.

THE BRUNSWICK

All Phonographs in One

Of all the advantages offered by this new phonograph the greatest is its natural tone production. You hear the voices of great singers as they really sound on stage or concert platforms.

Next is the fact that it plays all records. Both the Pathe, that introduces you to artists and music hitherto unknown in America, and every American record made. This is accomplished by two sound boxes, one for Pathe records and one for other makes.

The tone regulator is another special Brunswick feature. It modifies the sound through the "throat" of the machine, allowing you to play all records as you most enjoy them.

Equipment includes sapphire ball, jewel point and steel needles. 12-inch turntable, automatic stop.

The BRUNSWICK has been christened "All Phonographs in One." Certainly it combines the best features of the best phonographs made, introducing special refinements that make it the choice of critical music lovers.

GENERAL MEDICAL SCHOOL FOR CHICAGO.

It was announced Nov. 10, 1916, that the General Education board and the Rockefeller Foundation had each appropriated $1,000,000 for the establishment, in connection with the University of Chicago, of schools of medicine and research laboratories. The gifts were conditional on the raising of $3,300,000 additional. Of this amount it was announced that $700,000 had already been pledged. Rush Medical college and the Presbyterian hospital are to be a part of the new medical center. The plans call for the best teaching forces and equipment obtainable.

It was announced Nov. 13 that Mr. and Mrs. Julius Rosenwald of Chicago had subscribed $500,000 for the new medical institution. Later Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Rawson added $300,000 to the fund.

A Remarkable Record

IN recognition of the results obtained from safety measures in practice on the Chicago Elevated Railroads, the American Museum of Safety in 1916 awarded "Honorable Mention" to the Chicago Elevated Railroads in the Brady Medal contest among electric railroads.

Eight years without one fatal accident

One billion two hundred millions of passengers—equivalent nearly to the population of the world—have been carried by the Chicago Elevated Railroads during eight years without a single fatal accident while on their trains.

Safety first, last and always—as instanced by the recent installation of 250 new all-steel cars—is the constant watchword of the Elevated management. Civic pride alone, aside from individual interest, should induce Elevated patrons to co-operate in the elimination and prevention even of minor accidents.

Gunsaulus, Charles L. Hutchinson, Frank G. Logan, R. Hall McCormick, John J. Mitchell, Honore Palmer, Martin A. Ryerson, Howard Shaw, Charles H. Thorne. Ex officio, William Hale Thompson, mayor; Eugene R. Pike, city comptroller; John Barton Payne, president south park commissioners.

The Art Institute of Chicago was incorporated May 24, 1879, for the "founding and maintenance of schools of art and design, the formation and exhibition of collections of objects of art and the cultivation and extension of the arts of design by any appropriate means." The museum building upon the lake front, first occupied in 1893, has never been closed for a day. It is open to the public every weekday from 9 to 6, Sundays from 12:15 to 10 p. m. Admission is free to members and their families at all times, and free to all upon Wednesdays, Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays. Upon other days the entrance fee is 25 cents.

All friends of art are invited to become members. Annual members pay a fee of $10 a year. Life members pay $100 and are thenceforth exempt from dues. Governing members are elected by the trustees and pay $100 upon election and $25 a year thereafter. Upon the payment of $400 governing members become governing life members and are thenceforth exempt from dues. All receipts from life memberships are invested and the income only expended. All members are entitled, with their families and visiting friends, to admission to all exhibitions, receptions, public lectures and entertainments given by the Art Institute and to the use of the Ryerson reference library of art. Visitors desiring to see the collections under guidance may make appointments with the museum instructors at the office of the director.

MUSEUM.

The Art museum now ranks among the first three or four in the country. It contains excellent examples of the old masters and of the modern painters. There is also a large and comprehensive collection of sculptures, including reproductions of the work of the greatest sculptors, ancient and modern. There is an extensive collection of architectural casts. Other fields of art are represented by collections of etchings, engravings, textiles, oriental art, Egyptian and classical antiquities, etc. There is a constant succession of passing exhibitions, thirty-five or more in a year. All students enjoy the full use of the collections and the library. The number of visitors to the museum during the year ended Dec. 31, 1915, was $79,834.

The school of instruction in the practice and theory of art includes departments of painting, sculpture, decorative designing, illustration, architecture and normal instruction. There are day and evening classes for beginners and for advanced pupils and special classes on Saturdays. The instructors number about eighty and the pupils average about 3,000 a year. The principle upon which the school is founded is to maintain in the highest efficiency the severe practice of academic drawing and painting, from life, from the antique and from objects, and around this practice, as a living stem, to group the various departments of art education.

The school is conducted upon the most modern methods and has grown to be the most comprehensive and probably the largest fine arts school in the United States. Constructive communication and interchange are kept up with European art centers and distinguished teachers from a distance are called in from time to time. Students may enter at any time. The tuition rates are as follows:

Day School—Registration fee, $5; full time for full term of twelve weeks, $30; four weeks, $12; four days a week, full term, $27; four weeks, $11; three days a week, full term, $24; four weeks, $9; two days a week, full term, $18; four weeks, $7; one day a week, full term, $12; four weeks, $5.

HOUSE NUMBER SYSTEM IN CHICAGO.

The present house number system in Chicago was established by an ordinance passed June 22, 1908, and effective Sept. 1, 1909. This applied to all streets except those between the river, 12th street and the lake. Sept. 20, 1910, the city council passed an amendment to the ordinance making it applicable to the entire city. The change in the business district went into effect April 1, 1911. The system is laid out on two base lines, State street dividing the east and west streets and Madison street the north and south streets. Numbers are assigned on the basis of 800 to the mile or 100 to the prevailing block of 660 feet or one-eighth of a mile.

Some Interesting Figures

In 1907, when the traction problems were solved by the adoption of the so-called "Settlement Ordinances" (after the entire question had been submitted to a referendum vote of the residents of Chicago), a value was established by the city of Chicago for the properties as they then existed. That valuation, which was more than $30,000,000 below the value claimed by the companies, arbitrarily disregarded many millions of capital that had actually been invested in their securities.

To this 1907 valuation the city has permitted the companies to add the amounts actually expended on capital account when authorized and certified by the Board of Supervising Engineers. These expenditures, covering track extensions and additions to equipment, brought the total purchase price as of January 31, 1916, to $148,221,578.54. This represented the figure at which the city might have taken over the properties if it chose to exercise the right at that date.

The companies pay to the city of Chicago for the privilege of operating their cars in the streets 55 per cent of their net receipts annually. This has amounted in nine years to over $17,000,000 and will have reached $20,000,000 by Feb. 1, 1917.

Like other corporations, the Surface Lines have borne their share of taxation, this item aggregating over $9,000,000 in the last nine years. In addition the companies have been required under the ordinances to contribute in purely public benefits having nothing whatever to do with transportation a further sum approximating $15,000,000 on account of paving, maintaining paving and cleaning and sprinkling right of way.

The total payments on account of these various forms of public benefits, including taxes, exceed $41,000,000.

As employers of well paid labor, the Surface Lines are quite as notable as in their contributions to public benefits, as they distribute over $12,000,000 annually in wages, $9,000,000 of this amount being paid to the motormen, conductors and other employees directly concerned in the movement of cars.

Suggestions for Visitors.

Chicago, aside from its importance as a great business center, has numerous attractions which make it the ideal vacation city, and its location on the shores of Lake Michigan justifies its recognition as the ideal summer resort.

The Surface Lines offer the most convenient transportation in Chicago. An interesting folder with a map of the sight-seeing district can be had on application to room 804, the Borland building, corner Monroe and LaSalle streets.

Here are a few suggestions to the visitor who desires to become acquainted with some of Chicago's attractions and for the general information of those who would like to have a more comprehensive idea of what to see and how to see it:

NEW MUNICIPAL PIER—Here is one of Chicago's newest and greatest wonders—a great recreation center and a steamboat landing extending 3,000 feet into the lake and costing about $5,000,000. Here one may enjoy the cooling breezes of Lake Michigan while getting an expansive view of the city's sky line. There are many attractions on the pier itself during the season, including observation towers, board walk, children's playground, open air and inclosed restaurants, public dining room for picnickers and immense freight and passenger boat terminals. No one should miss this trip. Take through route No. 1 car in Wabash avenue, State street car in State street, Broadway car in Dearborn or Randolph street, Clark street or through route No. 22 car in Clark street, or Lincoln avenue car in LaSalle street; ride north to Grand avenue and transfer east to the lake. Cars operate on the pier.

CLARENDON BATHING BEACH—This municipal enterprise is one of the newest attractions in Chicago. It is owned and operated by the city and should be visited by every one. Costly buildings beautify the premises. Ten thousand bathers can use the beach at one time, and even if one does not care to "take a dip" a pleasant afternoon can be spent here. Take through route No. 1 car in Wabash avenue or Broadway car in Dearborn or Randolph street, ride north to Sunnyside avenue and walk east to the lake.

CHICAGO'S GREAT ZOO—No collection of animals in the United States is more complete or interesting than the one in Lincoln park. Here are 1,700 specimens which are a continual source of delight to children and grownups alike. One cannot visit the "Zoo" too often. Take through route No. 1 car in Wabash avenue, Clark street or through route No. 22 car in Clark street, Broadway car in Dearborn or Randolph street, or Lincoln avenue car in LaSalle street, ride north to main entrance of Lincoln park at Center street.

CHICAGO'S WONDERFUL PARKS.

DOUGLAS PARK—Has many attractions such as athletic field, flower gardens, boating facilities and natatorium. Take 12th street car in Dearborn or Adams street, or Ogden avenue car in State or Randolph street, ride west to park at 12th street and California avenue.

GARFIELD PARK—Has many attractions, including flower gardens, boating facilities, public golf course, largest conservatory in the United States, several statues. Take Madison street car on Madison street to park entrance at Central Park avenue.

HUMBOLDT PARK—Offers facilities for boating and other recreation and has some attractive statues. Take Division street car in State or Washington street and ride west to park at terminus of line.

JACKSON PARK—One of Chicago's most beautiful spots, on part of which was located the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893. Here are splendid boating facilities, a bathing beach, two public golf courses, Field museum, flower gardens, government life saving station and LaRabida sanitarium. Take Jackson park car or Stony Island-93d car in Wabash avenue to "Midway" at 59th street.

LINCOLN PARK—One of the city's most interesting attractions. See Zoo with 1,700 animals, Academy of Sciences, bathing beach and golf course near Diversey boulevard, conservatory, flower gardens, boating and other recreation facilities; also the world famous St. Gaudens statue of Abraham Lincoln. Take through route No. 1 car in Wabash avenue, Clark street or through route No. 22 car in Clark street, Broadway car in Dearborn street or Lincoln avenue car in LaSalle street, ride north to main entrance of park at Center street.

WASHINGTON PARK—Offers facilities for boating and other recreation. Take through route No. 3 car in Wabash avenue and ride south to terminus at park, or take Cottage Grove car in Wabash avenue and ride south to 55th street entrance.

OTHER POINTS OF INTEREST.

ACADEMY OF SCIENCES—A noted museum of natural history having many interesting specimens. Open from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. daily and 1 p. m. to 5 p. m. Sundays. Free. Take through route No. 1 car in Wabash avenue, or Clark street or through route No. 22 car in Clark street, or Broadway car in Dearborn street, or Lincoln avenue car in LaSalle street, ride north to Lincoln park entrance at Clark and Center streets.

FIELD MUSEUM—One of Chicago's "seven wonders" is this costly collection of natural history material gathered from the remotest corners of the world. Its present home in Jackson park was the Fine Arts building of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. A permanent building to house this great institution is to be erected on Grant park at a cost of $4,000,000. The museum is open to visitors 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. daily—free on Saturdays and Sundays. Take Jackson park or Stony Island-93d car in Wabash avenue to 57th street and Stony Island avenue and walk east toward the lake.

CUBS' PARK—Home grounds of Chicago's National league team. Take Clark street or through route No. 22 car on Clark street and ride north to entrance at Addison street.

SOX PARK—Home grounds of Chicago's representative in the American Baseball league may be reached by taking Wentworth avenue or through route No. 2 or No. 22 car in Clark street. Ride south to 35th street and walk one block west to park entrance.

HAYMARKET SQUARE—This largest market for truck garden produce was the site of the anarchist riot in 1886. The activity of this place any weekday morning is worth watching. Take Ogden avenue car in State, Randolph or Lake street, and ride west to Desplaines street. Or take Madison street car west as far as Desplaines street and walk north two blocks to Randolph street. A stroll for several blocks west through the market will be interesting.

NEW UNION RAILWAY STATION.

Ordinances for a new union passenger station and new freight terminals on the west side were passed by the city council March 23, 1914, after many months of investigation and consideration. Under the ordinances the union passenger station, to be occupied by the Pennsylvania, Burlington, Alton and St. Paul railroads, is to be located on the block bounded by Canal, Adams, Clinton and Jackson streets. Under Canal street there will be a subway connecting a large concourse on the east of that thoroughfare with the station. Sixteen passenger tracks will lead to the south and ten to the north. This part of the passenger terminal will reach practically from Carroll avenue on the north to 12th street on the south. The Pennsylvania freighthouses will be located immediately north of 12th street and extend to Taylor street, while the Burlington freighthouses will be between Harrison and Taylor streets and near Canal street. In exchange for rights in certain streets the railroads agreed to make improvements as follows:

Improvements.	Cost.
Viaduct, Monroe street.....	$100,000
Viaduct, 12th street.....	270,000
Viaduct, Congress street.....	300,000
Viaducts, 14th and 16th streets.....	400,000
Viaducts, Taylor, Polk, Harrison, Van Buren, Jackson, Adams, Madison, Randolph and Lake streets.....	1,760,000
Elevated roadway, Canal and Kinzie streets	650,000

Revamping of Canal street, Washington to 12th street.....$2,375,000

Total 5,855,000

To fit in with these improvements the city agreed to the following improvements at the costs estimated:

Bridge, Monroe street.....	$500,000
Double decked bridge, Kinzie street...	600,000
Land to widen Canal street to 100 feet...	760,753

Total 1,860,753

In addition, the roads agreed to pay $1,511,000 in cash compensation.

The total cost to the railroads of the improvements under the terminal ordinances was estimated at $65,000,000, exclusive of money previously paid for land.

Feb. 19, 1915, the city council passed an ordinance providing for the vacation of certain streets and alleys in connection with the Baltimore & Ohio freight terminal ordinance, making it possible for that road to vacate part of its old yards, which are needed for the new union terminal. The city, in payment for the streets and alleys surrendered to the railroad company, received $111,504.77.

Work on the union terminal was begun Feb. 22, 1915. It consisted of preparing for the new freighthouses of the Pennsylvania company. Later, work was started on some of the street changes made necessary by the plans.

TORRENS SYSTEM OF REGISTERING LAND TITLES

By JOSEPH F. CONNERY,

Registrar of Titles for Cook County.

This system provides for the establishment of the status of the legal title to real estate by a decree of Court and, also, provides for the issuance of a "Certificate of Title" to the property, when so established, by a Public Officer, the Recorder of Deeds (Registrar of Titles), without delay and at small expense to owners.

It simplifies Real Estate transfers and affords absolute security for real estate owners. Lawyers and real estate dealers endorse and recommend its use. Compared with the abstract and guarantee policy systems, its cost is much less and its benefits and protection much greater.

The initial registration is $25.00 and up.

The purchaser pays the transfer fee of $3.00 when the property is sold.

The certificate of title issued by the Recorder of Deeds (Registrar of Titles) under the Land Registration Act is the obligation of Cook County, and also has back of it the Indemnity Fund of $1.00 per thousand on the value of all registered real estate. The Certificate is based upon the Court Decree. It is not an insurance policy limited in amount or otherwise, but is the guarantee of Cook County. An examination of the Certificate tells instantly who the owner is and what the condition of the title is. Sales can be made when the property is once registered, and a new Certificate issued to the purchaser without delay and at an expense of $3.00.

"So stick to your desks and never go to sea,

And you all may be rulers of the Queen's na-vee."

THUS counseled Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., thirty years ago from the quarterdeck of H. M. S. Pinafore, when telling how one might rise to the top of the tree.

Gilbert and Sullivan were past-masters of satire, and back of all their keen thrusts and stinging humor big truths lay.

Thus thought Margaret Mackin, an operator in the employ of the Chicago Telephone Company, so she stuck to her switchboard and then to her desk as chief operator and central office manager and won for herself the title of The World's Greatest Telephone Operator, and now another compliment has been bestowed upon Margaret Mackin (now Mrs. A. P. Hyatt): The new recreation camp of the Chicago Telephone Company, dedicated to the promotion of health and happiness for its operators, has been called Margaret Mackin Hall.

A brief description of the Hall and the purposes for which it has been established will be of interest to the patrons and friends of the Chicago Telephone Company.

Men who shape the policies of manufacturing and business establishments have long been aware that systems which conserve the energies and build up the physical and mental qualifications of their employees are not philanthropic but are economically sound from the standpoint of efficiency. Energy, as typified in the human organization, becomes depleted in men and women who toil either with their hands or their brains, as does the energy generated by the dynamo. To restore and renew the human dynamo is as necessary as is the renewal of the parts of a machine. We all know that machinery constantly employed, and without replacement of parts which become worn, deteriorates rapidly and soon becomes fit only for the junk heap. A man or an organization that permits a plant to get into this condition is considered shortsighted and poorly equipped to handle industrial problems. That condemnation even more severe should follow carelessness where the human element is concerned is evidenced by the fact that in practically all the states laws have been passed looking to the prevention of such carelessness or indifference.

It is a matter of pride to those who direct the activities of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its associated companies that consideration for personal welfare has always been a paramount thought, and that nothing has been left undone to make working conditions sanitary, safe and attractive, both in the operating rooms and all the other departments of its vast plant. It has been their policy, also, to care for and build up employees whose health has become impaired while in the service of the organization. In fact, nearly as much care has been bestowed upon the study of this phase of its corporate responsibility as has been devoted to the actual development of the telephone business itself, with the result that its employees work under conditions of sanitation, good lighting and recreational features that are approached by few, if any, corporations anywhere, be they large or small.

The Chicago Telephone Company, one of the principal units of the Bell System, has taken a most advanced step along the line of industrial welfare work in the completion and opening of its recreation camp, which is located about forty miles west of Chicago, near the little hamlet of Warrenville. Care was taken in the selection of the site that it should have merit, not only from a practical standpoint but from the artistic as well, in that it should contain possibilities for development under the hand of the landscape gardener that would make it an attractive spot in which to spend a recuperative period. After careful study of the environs of Chicago, a tract located on the Du Page river was selected. The little river practically bisects the property and gives it an added charm. The general contour of the locality is gently rolling, and there is sufficient wooded area to break the monotony of a strictly farming section. Almost directly in the center of the company's property there is a knoll, elliptical in shape, which runs north and south and furnishes a charming site for a country house. The north half of the ellipse is wooded, but as one approaches the south end the timber thins out sufficiently to permit of the location of a large house without any sacrifice of well-grown trees.

Upon this knoll, which sets well back from the public highway that passes to the west, the house has been erected, and is approached by a private road which curves from the gate north to the bank of the Du Page river, and then sweeps across a substantial rustic bridge, from which it bends south to the entrance.

The plans for the house were made the subject of exhaustive study by one of Chicago's leading firms of architects; the studies were based upon suggestions made by the officials of the telephone company. Comfort and convenience were the first requisites, with complete modern country house equipment following close, the whole to be a combination harmonious from every standpoint. The result has been a most attractive building, following colonial lines, and as fully equipped in every particular as any town or country house could possibly be.

Let us digress for a moment for the purpose of considering just why and for whom this attractive place has been provided.

The Chicago Telephone Company employs between 7,500 and 8,500 women. While there are no vocational diseases peculiar to telephone operation, it could hardly be expected that sickness could be entirely excluded from so large a body of women, no matter what care was bestowed upon the buildings and the maintenance of sanitary conditions. In 1915 the number of cases of sickness was 1,500, of which 416 were influenza, 211 tonsillitis and 71 bronchitis. There were cases, also, of pneumonia, neurasthenia, neuralgia, anæmia, rheumatism, appendicitis, and so on. In order to repair the ravages of these indispositions and for a general toning up of the young women, it was decided to try the experiment of taking them away from the rush and roar of the city for a brief season and giving them an opportunity to benefit by country life. Cottages were taken in the

And now let us see what the girl, wearied by weeks of continuous application to her work, or recuperating from an illness which has left her weak and unprepared to at once take hold of her duties, finds awaiting her at Margaret Mackin Hall, the new recreation camp. The trip from Chicago to Warrenville is made over a suburban electric road and requires about one and one-half hours for Chicago suburbs of Highland Park and Lake Bluff in 1914 and 1915 respectively, and the results were so satisfactory that the officials of the company decided to make this a permanent practice in dealing with illness amongst its operators, and looked about for a permanent location, with the result that the beautiful Warrenville tract was decided upon.

the run. Leaving the car at the Warrenville station, the guest has a walk of about three hundred yards to the lodge gate, upon the south side of which is the caretaker's cottage—this caretaker, by the way, being the only Adam in this telephone Eden. Following the winding road and crossing over the river, she approaches the spacious country house whose broad entrance extends to her a hearty and hospitable welcome. Passing in, she finds herself in an inviting low ceiled room, furnished with big easy chairs and comfortable divans. Around the walls are bookcases and opposite the entrance is a huge fireplace surmounted by a large mantelpiece, over which hangs a picture of Mrs. Margaret Mackin Hyatt, in whose honor the Hall has been named. The furnishings of the living room and the draperies are in soft, restful tones, and the foliage outside, breaking the glare of the sunlight, serves to throw a softened light over the interior, conducive to rest and quiet. From the northeast and southeast corners of the living room broad stairways lead to a room on the floor above, which conforms exactly in size to the living room, but is furnished in wicker so that the chairs can be easily pushed aside when the rugs are rolled up and the Victrola is started and the bachelor maids seek dancing partners from among their maid-only fellows.

On the left, or north of the living room, is the hallway of the first floor dormitory. There are four rooms on each side of this hallway, and between each two rooms is a bath. The bedrooms are furnished with two iron beds, a bureau and four chairs, two of which are rockers, all the furniture being white enameled. Light and attractive wall decorations and hangings prevail.

At the end of the dormitory hall are two shower baths, just to the left of the entrance to the sleeping porch. This sleeping porch is large and commodious and is built with large openings, which are closed with glass in winter and screens in summer. There are accommodations here for sixteen beds. The dormitory on the second floor conforms exactly to the first floor arrangement. The combined capacity of dormitories and sleeping porch is sixty-four beds.

A pergola connects the main building with the service building. This pergola is seventy-five feet long and eight feet wide, and is entirely inclosed in glass. In the center it expands to an octagonal room sixteen feet wide, forming a delightful sun parlor, in which comfortable porch seats have been placed.

In the service building are the dining room, kitchen, laundry and sleeping quarters for the attendants, together with the heating plant which supplies heat for the main building. In the kitchen are all the modern appliances, including an eight-burner gas range, an electric dish washer, and shelves and cabinets for the storage of china, dry groceries and the like. A large laundry provided with the necessary tubs, drier, electric mangle and electric washer adjoins the kitchen. Another feature of the service building is a three compartment refrigerator equipment with a mechanical refrigeration system. In addition to storage of provisions, ice for the table and other purposes is supplied from this system.

The water supply of the Hall is obtained from a well 201 feet deep, drilled 162 feet through solid limestone. The pump is operated by an electric motor and delivers seventy-five gallons per minute to a pressure tank twenty-eight feet long and nine feet high holding 13,328 gallons. The operation of the motor is regulated automatically by the pressure inside the water system. The water has been tested by the Chicago city health laboratory and found entirely satisfactory from a sanitary standpoint.

There is a swimming pool forty by sixty feet, and this is supplied with water from the pressure tank. The depth in the deepest part is four feet, diminishing to three feet in the shallowest part.

Sewage disposal is by means of a septic system designed for a future capacity of one hundred persons. The gate lodge is provided with a separate septic system.

Lighting of the main buildings is principally semi-indirect. A time switch controls the lamps which light the roadway and the bridge over the Du Page river.

The one other building on the place is the caretaker's lodge at the entrance to the grounds. It is a one-story and basement cottage containing six rooms and a bath. The lodge conforms in style of architecture to the main buildings and has, in connection, a garage with space for two cars.

So much for the physical features. Now for "atmosphere." Rules and regulations? Yes; President Sunny promulgated five the day he dedicated the Hall. They are:

Rule 1—Guests on arrival will be glad they came, delighted with everything they see, and like every one they meet.

Rule 2—Eat three hearty meals a day.

Rule 3—Sleep nine hours every night and take a nap during the day.

Rule 4—Be happy and make every one else happy.

Rule 5—Weep when the time comes to go.

In the main, Margaret Mackin Hall is a democracy. There is a superintendent, but her function is to mother the guests rather than control them. The operators have certain duties, such as caring for their rooms and their personal laundry work, mending and so forth. The principal occupation, however, during their stay is to get rested and strong and to get an incurable desire to come back. That is what the company wants primarily, and so questions of administration are to be worked out as they arise by the girls themselves, and from all suggestions presented a composite is looked for which will make the government of, by and for the guests.

There is one restriction, however, which the company has been forced to adopt and with which the young women are in hearty accord: Visitors are only admitted on card issued by the Traffic Superintendent of the Chicago Telephone Company. Welfare workers and the public generally, from the very outset, displayed such marked interest in this "happiness" experiment that they bade fair to frustrate its intent by making it a show place instead of a haven of rest and quiet. And so it was thought best to close the gates and limit admission in the interests of freedom and relaxation for those for whose benefit Margaret Mackin Hall was conceived.
